4 MDs probed for drug Rx

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons is investigating four doctors suspected of handing out narcotic drug prescriptions to known addicts, in some cases in return for cash and other favors.

College registrar Dr. John Hutchison of Vancouver said Friday the number of doctors engaged in the illegal practice is extremely low, but some pharmacists and police officials feel it represents only the tip of the iceberg.

One local pharmacist estimated as many as six doctors in the Greater Victoria area alone are issuing prescriptions knowing full well the drugs aren't being used for medical purposes.

One Victoria addict said in an interview it was easy to get drug prescriptions filled.

She said that early this summer she was able to get 240 valium pills a week and all the narcotic-based cough syrup she needed to support her habit by going to one or two doctors in the area.

"We all know who they are," she said. "They'll give us whatever we want without any questions asked."

She said she knows of one doctor who has accepted sexual favors from a patient in exchange for prescriptions.

Hutchison agreed such exchanges do happen and that there may be some under-the-table payoffs.

"I am sure they exist," he said, adding it is almost impossible to prove.

"Doctors are no different from anyone else. A few are weak. They allow themselves to get caught as easy marks. They just aren't tough enough."

A Greater Victoria police drug squad officer said that once a doctor gets the reputation of an easy mark he's in for a rough time.

He said he knows three doctors in the area who have got themselves in such a bind that they fear reprisals if they don't continue to meet their addict patients' demands.

"They come to me and say they don't know what to do."

B.C. gung-ho to drill

British Columbia would like to resume offshore exploratory drilling for oil right away, if environmental concerns can be satisfied, deputy energy minister James Fyles said today.

"We are eager to find out what's out there."

His statement follows an historic announcement in Vancouver Friday by Prime Minister Joe Clark that Ottawa will transfer control of all offshore oil and mineral rights to the province.

Details of the transfer have yet to be negotiated.

The decision cancels the policy of the former Liberal government that Ottawa had a right to 25 per cent of all offshore wealth.

Clark's announcement was no surprise, however, as similar agreements had been negotiated with Nova Scotia and Newfoundland earlier this week.

Among issues still outstanding is a 10-year moratorium on B.C. offshore drilling imposed by Ottawa in 1972.

B.C. wants the moratorium ended immediately.

Clark said native Indian rights must also be fully protected in any general settlement about offshore exploration. Clark had met with a representative of the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs in Vancouver before meeting Bennett.

Fyles said two steps would have to precede the resumption of offshore drilling. Ottawa would have to end the moratorium and oil companies would have to satisfy the province that there are no environmental hazards.

He said Chevron in particular is interested in resuming exploration off B.C.'s coast.

Oil exploration so far has resulted only in dry holes but there is some promise of undersea mining if the technology is developed.

From Ottawa's viewpoint, the outstanding issues include the environment, international implications and Indian aboriginal rights.

Said Clark: "They (Indian rights) may not arise directly from the negotiations but we have an obligation as the federal authority to ensure that the rights of native people are protected in any negotiations where those rights might be legitimate."

Premier Bennett said there were a number of issues to be settled before control was passed to the provincial government but the meeting with Clark was a good start. Among issues left hanging is the status of offshore exploration permits issued by the federal government.

The 10-year moratorium was imposed to allow an environmental study.

Clark defended his tactic of reaching agreements in principle in private talks with premiers rather than waiting to raise the issue when Parliament opens.

"This type of discussion and policy was discussed at length in the most basic of our democratic institutions — the national election campaign."

Exploration for oil off B.C.'s coast has been less promising than off the Atlantic coast where there were reports this week of potential oil finds.

In the 1960s, Shell Canada drilled 14 dry holes off the Queen Charlotte Islands and there has been little drilling activity since.

Mineral rights offer some potential long-term benefits, particularly in sea-bottom managanese nodules which also contain nickel, copper and cobalt.

Clark reiterated his concern about the danger of oil tanker traffic on the West Coast and sided with Bennett that B.C. and Canada should indicate to the United States a strong preference for the Foothills pipeline route.

Foothills Oil Pipe Lines Ltd. has proposed an overland pipeline to Alberta from Alaska to transport oil to the lower 48 states. Two other consortiums propose oil tankers carrying Alaskan crude down the Pacific Coast.

WRECKERS STRUGGLED to right fully-loaded cement truck that didn't quite make the turn on the southbound ramp off Pat Bay Highway at the Quadra Street interchange Friday afternoon. Driver Bradley Dutemple, 19, of 219-7840 Lochside, escaped with minor cuts in the 4 p.m. mishap. The owner of the truck, Beacon Ready-Mix of Sidney, got the shock. The truck, valued at $70,000, was a write-off.

No more bikini shots

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Miami Beach tourism authority has ordered its staff photographer to stop snapping promotional shots of women in bikinis, calling the practice "out of style."

Officials are also concerned that the daily cheesecake shots are not consistent with the city's support for the National Organization for Women, which has imposed an economic boycott on Florida and other states that have not ratified the federal Equal Rights Amendment.

Ted Griffin, executive director of the tourism authority, said he wants the photographers to concentrate instead on "a more action and situation-oriented, visitor-type photographic essay format."

Losses to the resort city have been estimated at $13 million during the last two years because of the NOW boycott. But Griffin insists that he has not been pressured by NOW or other pro-ERA forces to cut out the cheesecake shots.

Elderly and single parents need help on rent - report

OTTAWA (CP) — A confidential report to the Clark cabinet says half the elderly renters and half the single-parent families need help to pay the rent each month.

The report says these people, now paying out more than 25 per cent of their monthly income for rent, would be major beneficiaries of a shelter allowance program, in effect a monthly rental subsidy for those with low incomes.

It recommends a shelter allowance be coupled with the homeowner assistance plan unveiled earlier this week by Finance Minister John Crosbie.

The Crosbie plan would pay up to $1,500 in tax refunds for mortgage interest and property tax payments when it is fully implemented in 1982. But when the plan was released Monday, it contained nothing for renters.

Government sources said Thursday the annual price tag for a shelter allowance plan for homeowners now is set at about $750 million. That is about one-third of the $2.3-billion annual cost estimated for the homeowner plan when it is fully implemented in 1982.

Liberal housing critic Lloyd Axworthy released portions of the confidential report Friday following the earlier disclosures about the cost of the rental assistance plan.

"What this demonstrates is that the Conservatives are ignoring the figures on real housing need that are being presented to them," said Axworthy, newly-elected MP for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

"They are ignoring the reality."

Most of approximately 5.5 million homeowners would benefit from the $250 annual tax credit for property taxes under the Crosbie plan. But only the half who hold unpaid mortgages would be eligible for the tax credit of up to $1,250 for mortgage interest payments.

The report released by Axworthy says the following groups would benefit.

—About 237,000 senior citizen (over 65) households or about 50 per cent of those renting in the private market.

—About 80,000 single-parent families, or about half those who rent in the private market.

—About 60,000 families without children or about 14 per cent of those in this category who rent.

—About 17 per cent of families with children who rent or about 105,000 families.

Rentalsman's power restored

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal has restored the rentalsman's power to terminate tenancies.

In a written decision Friday, Mr. Justice J. D. Lambert upset a county court ruling that a section of the Residential Tenancy Act was unconstitutional and a rentalsman's order terminating a tenancy was made without jurisdiction.

The appeal court's decision also restored the termination order.

The landlord had applied to the rentalsman for an order to terminate the tenancy and specify the date the landlord could take possession.

A rentalsman officer heard the application Dec. 22, 1978, then made an order terminating the tenancy Dec. 31 and specifying Jan. 1 as the date the landlord could take possession.

The tenant filed notice of review, and County Court Judge J. C. Cowan decided that the section of the act used was unconstitutional, so the rentalsman's order was made without jurisdiction.

In the constitutional argument, it was claimed that the act gave the rentalsman the powers of a federally-appointed judge.

Mr. Justice Lambert ruled that the rights and obligations given the rentalsman are new statuatory rights and obligations established by the act, and that the section of the act in dispute does not make the rentalsman, in the exercise of that function, a tribunal, analagous to a superior, district or county court.

Bobby Hull cleared in family fight

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Bobby Hull, the "Golden Jet" who once threatened to quit hockey if the game's violence was not toned down, was found not guilty of common assault in provincial court Friday.

Hull admitted in court that he broke down the door of his separated wife's house here in an attempt to see his children last year.

Joanne Hull, who has been separated from her husband for two years and is seeking a divorce, charged that Hull, 40, struck her with a piece of the door.

Judge J. D. Layton, in dismissing the charge after a two-hour trial, said the case involved child custody and he said he has found "that parents often exaggerate."

Court was told that a Manitoba court order gave custody of the couple's five children to Mrs. Hull. The order makes no provisions for visiting rights for Hull.

Mrs. Hull testified that her husband followed her to her home here last Dec. 9 following a junior hockey game in which their son Brett was playing.

She entered the home and locked the door but, seconds later, Hull knocked down the locked door, breaking it into two pieces, she said.

"With that, the door come splintering in, crashed in. He stood in the kitchen, screaming and yelling."

Mrs. Hull said she bent down to remove a piece of door from a potted plant.

"Robert Marvin Hull pulled it out of my hand. Seconds later he picked it up and hit me."

She said she called police, then had to go to the hospital for treatment of cuts to her shoulder, wrist and hand.

The piece of door — about 2.7 metres long, a third of a metre wide and four centimetres thick — was entered as evidence as were pictures of Mrs. Hull's wounds.

An RCMP constable who arrived at the home minutes after the incident told the court that Hull denied breaking down the door. However Hull in court admitted breaking the door down and called the policeman a liar.

"I wanted to see the two (younger children)," Hull testified. "I didn't come all the way to Vancouver not to see the children, and I felt that kids might have been in the house.

"So I stepped back and broke the door down. The door was splintered and I walked in and asked to see the kids.

"She picked the piece of wood up that she's talking about and took a swing at me and I brushed it aside. That's the only time I touched it. She then ran screaming and yelling to the telephone to phone the Mounties to bring their guns."

Asked how his wife was injured, Hull said: "They look like (finger) nail marks to me. I in no way inflicted those."

He said one doctor is so intimidated he's afraid if he doesn't accede to the addicts' requests they would burn down his house.

Hutchison said it is not only unethical but illegal for a doctor to give a patient a prescription knowing the drug won't be used for the treatment of any disease.

The Narcotic Control Act and Food and Drug Act prohibits medical practitioners from prescribing narcotics or controlled drugs unless the patient is undergoing active treatment for a condition warranting such medication.

"Where we can prove a doctor is dispensing drugs other than for a medical use we will take action, we will chop him," Hutchison said.

However, in the past year the college has taken that action only once and stopped short of expelling the offending doctor from the medical society. Hutchison said there was a reasonable doubt the doctor had simply been duped by an addict.

Hutchison said it is almost impossible to control the problem because of the difficulty in obtaining proof.

Doctors who knowingly hand out prescriptions to addicts are generally extremely careful in their reporting, he said. To cover their tracks they will place fictitious diagnoses on the patient's record.

Hutchison said suspicions are not enough to initiate an investigation. The college is powerless to pry into the affairs of a doctor unless there is hard evidence of malpractice.

However, he felt cases of blatant abuse are rare.

Most often the doctor is nothing more than the victim of a convincing and persuasive con artist.

Hutchison said it's easy for a doctor to be taken in if he's seeing a patient for the first time and the patient is skilful in presenting a list of symptoms for which a narcotic drug is normally prescribed.

"The doctors are faced with a very difficult choice. Either they treat every stranger who comes to them or they tell them to go away.

"We have to accept the fact that we are going to get caught every once in a while."

Hutchison would not say how many reports the college is receiving on the problem, but said the number is low considering there are 4,600 practicing physicians in the province.

He said some tip-offs come from doctors who are required under the Medical Act to report to the registrar of the college any instance of a colleague acting in an unprofessional manner. But most often the tips come from the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs and College of Pharmacists which constantly monitor drug use.

Patients, too, have reported cases. But they are few and far between.

"The people who know most about this are the addicts," said Hutchison. "And they are the last people to stand up and tell us."

Parity urged for B.C. gas

Energy Minister James Hewitt said Friday the export price of gas paid to British Columbia should be the same as Mexico will receive under a new agreement signed this week with the United States.

Under the agreement Mexico will get $3.625 per 1,000 cubic feet of gas, a rate substantially higher than the $2.80 B.C. receives from its over-the-border sales.

Hewitt said he cannot accept a two-tiered rate structure but felt the impetus for change should come from the federal and not provincial government.

"We will look to the National Energy Board to recommend to the (federal) cabinet to match Mexico's price," he said.

New Democratic Party leader Dave Barrett, who has long advocated tougher bargaining on B.C.'s gas export prices, said he was appalled at Hewitt's decision to wait for the NEB to make the first move.

He said it was typical of a weak provincial government.

Barrett said Hewitt has known for two years Mexico was negotiating a tough deal and B.C. should have held out for a higher price.

Barrett has said repeatedly B.C. should be tougher in dealing with the NEB, and refuse to sell gas until it got a higher price.

"But everytime I raised the point in the past year I was attacked by Hewitt and the premier."

"Yes, I am angry, very angry. I told them so and they attacked me. They should apologize, but I know they won't."

The Mexican announcement Friday doesn't exonerate Barrett, Hewitt said, because when Barrett raised the issue in the past, Mexico wasn't selling any gas to the U.S.

Barrett said thousands of dollars daily were lost to provincial coffers that could have gone to schools and hospitals because B.C. insisted on selling gas at too low a price.

B.C. has contracts with U.S. purchasers to sell up to 805 million cubic feet of gas a day. That amount is met at peak times.

If B.C. does get an 82½-cent per thousand cubic feet increase to match the Mexicans, most of the windfall will go into general revenue, although the producers and transmission company will get some of it.

Hewitt said if world conditions continue, the price of gas could rise to $6 per thousand within four years.

Work-to-rule plan launched

B.C. Hydro's 3,700 clerical, office and related employees today began a work-to-rule campaign and reinstated their ban on overtime following the breakdown Friday of contract negotiations.

Fred Trotter, president of the Office and Technical Employees Union, Local 378, said Hydro is deliberately stonewalling.

"Hydro does not want to negotiate a settlement," he said.

"They admit they have more moves to make but they refuse to discuss them unless we agreed that the members will pay for the administration of a new job evaluation scheme, which won't even start until next year at the earliest."

Trotter said the issue is a red herring because neither side has yet decided whether to accept the job evaluation.

HONOLULU (AP) — A late night earthquake measuring 5.6 on the Richter scale jolted the big island of Hawaii but there were no immediate reports of serious damage or injury.

Human blood saves chimp

NORMAN, Okla. (UPI) — Human blood has been used to save the life of a baby chimpanzee in what researchers say may be the first human-to-chimp transfusion.

A spokesman at the University of Oklahoma Institute for Primate Studies said Friday about four teaspoons of human blood were given Wednesday to Zeb, a 3-week-old chimpanzee.

An Institute official said Zeb appeared healthy and has gained some weight from his 2-pound, 2-ounce birth weight. Zeb and his healthier twin brother, Zeke, have been under 24-hour care since their premature birth.

Pat Crown, an institute administrative assistant, said a university graduate student, Mel Allen, was called late Wednesday to donate blood to the chimp. Allen's blood type is considered a universal donor type, reducing chances of rejection by the chimp's body.

Ms. Crown said a pediatric nurse from an Oklahoma City hospital performed the transfusion under supervision of a Norman pediatrician.

why buy a speaker from someone who would just as soon sell you a sprinkler?

At Sound Hounds, helping you choose fine stereo equipment is our only business!
A lot of stores that sell speakers also sell lawnmowers, hedge clippers, and sprinklers. What they know about speakers can often fit on the tip of a tweeter!
But, we're a bit less diversified here at Sound Hounds. Fine stereo equipment, like Large Advent speakers is all we sell. And luckily for you, we've been selling it long enough to really know what we're talking about.
So when you come to us for a Large Advent speaker, or any other quality speaker, we can answer your questions in plain English (without throwing in a lot of jargon just to impress you).
Most importantly, we'll give you the opportunity to sit down and actually listen to the various speakers in our comfortable surroundings. So you can hear the differences for yourself.
And, if you wisely decide to buy a pair of Large Advent speakers from us, we'll back them up with a 5-year guarantee and our responsible service program.
So, shop at Sound Hounds for your next pair of speakers.
We're the store where fine stereo equipment is not just another household appliance.

Petition urges Atkey ouster

VANCOUVER (UPC) — Immigration officers at the Douglas border crossing, who called Thursday for Immigration Minister Ron Atkey to quit, appeared uncertain Friday whether they wanted the minister to resign or not.

The 21 officers at the crossing, 40 kilometers south of Vancouver, signed a petition calling for Atkey's resignation after hearing news coverage about a report he released. The report said some immigrants encounter harassment, bias and discourtesy at Canadian ports of entry, particularly Toronto International Airport.

"They signed it before reading the report," said Julia Bardos, assistant to the director of operations at the CEIU headquarters in Ottawa. "They much regretted signing it after reading the report."

But Bud Alcorn, vice-president of Local 20910 and a spokesman for the union members who signed the petition, said the officers still haven't read the report.

"We haven't heard the actual text," Alcorn said. "There's a copy on the way to us. We'll wait for it and then comment."

Alcorn blamed the entire mixup on union members' misinterpretation of media reports about the contents of Atkey's report.

The report, commissioned by Atkey in July, was the result of an investigation of immigrants' complaints by a union representative, a Toronto justice of the peace and an employment and immigration commissioner.

Bardos said the CEIU headquarters had no intention of reprimanding the officers. She said no others across the country had signed petitions calling for Atkey's resignation.

Alcorn said that the union members at the Douglas crossing had not officially withdrawn the resignation request.

"If it was misinterpreted then possibly we are in error," he said. "The call for resignation is still there. We're just holding it in abeyance."

Langley farmer Erwin Rindt in field of unsold cauliflower

Vegetable board gets earful from irate caulifower grower

LANGLEY (CP) — Farmer Erwin Rindt says he must offer his cauliflower to the public for $5 a dozen because he can't sell it through the British Columbia Coast Vegetable Marketing Board.

Rindt said that while the board allows cauliflower to be imported, he hasn't been able to get rid of 12 acres of the vegetable that is approaching its peak on his farm in this Fraser Valley community.

"The marketing board is allowing cauliflower from Washington to be brought in while there are thousands of fresh, tender B.C. cauliflower in the fields that they won't allow the farmers to sell," he said. "If that damn board doesn't want to give the consumers a break, then I will."

His price was about $3.25 a dozen lower than prices advertised this week by Vancouver supermarkets.

A spokesman for the marketing board said if Rindt has too much cauliflower on his hands, it's his own fault.

Ed Pratt, board secretary-manager, said if producers don't stick to their quotas and grow too many vegetables, the board can't sell their surplus.

"I don't like to turn down produce, but we can't take it and pay for it if we know we can't sell it," he said.

Pratt said the board has no control over imported vegetables. All it can do is keep local prices competitive with imports.

Book claims Boggs survived air crash

ATLIN (CP) — RCMP have opened a file on Hale Boggs after two Montana writers claimed that the former majority leader in the U.S. Congress, believed to have died in a plane crash seven years ago, might still be alive.

Ed Lason and Cathy Kean have an unpublished book called The Challenge: Whatever Happened to Hale Boggs? which claims Boggs survived the plane crash and is possibly being held hostage in South America in a plot involving millions of dollars.

The outline of the plot they describe goes like this:

Boggs, accompanied by an aide and Alaska Congressman Nick Begich, left Anchorage in a plane flown by pilot Don Jonz. Jonz had somehow obtained millions of dollars in apparently illicit funds which he wanted to get out of Alaska.

When he heard there were federal agents waiting for him Juneau, he decided on the spur of the moment to land in British Columbia, then crash landed at a remote lake near here, the book claims.

Boggs and Jonz survived the crash; the other two didn't, the book says.

Nanaimo alderman convicted of libel

NANAIMO (CP) — A Nanaimo alderman has been found guilty of libel and ordered to pay $6,000 damages and court costs for comments he made in July about people involved with a local company.

Mr. Justice Albert Mackoff of the B.C. Supreme Court ordered Nelson Allen to pay $5,000 to Deane Finlayson and $1,000 to Woodgrove Holdings Ltd.

Mackoff said Allen made statements relating to Woodgrove's $70-million shopping centre project even though he testified in court they weren't true.

He said there was no question that the publication of Allen's remarks, made in a news release, tended to lower the reputation of Finlayson in other people's eyes.

Court was told the news release said Finlayson and others involved with Woodgrove were "greedy individuals who have no concern whatsoever for the citizens of this community and a group of speculators only interested in making a small fortune."

More Pr. George flights backed

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — A decision will be made next week on a Pacific Western Airlines application to increase service to Prince George and other northern British Columbia points, Malcom Armstrong of the Canadian transport commission, said Friday.

Armstrong, chairman of the commission's air transport committee, said the decision would be made at a Vancouver hearing that begins Monday on a PWA application for direct flights to Edmonton and Calgary from Vancouver.

During a two-day commission hearing which ended here Thursday, CP Air dropped its opposition to PWA increasing its service to northern points.

The airlines said an arrangement had been worked out whereby PWA's proposed direct flights to Vancouver and Victoria from Prince George could be phased in gradually by 1981.

CP Air opposed the original application but did not oppose the amended bid which proposed that the service be phased in.

PWA received support for its application from all 14 briefs submitted including ones from city businessmen, the cities of Prince George and Dawson Creek, the Regional Development Commission of the Fraser-Fort George Regional District and the Greater Victoria, Dawson Creek and Prince George chambers of commerce.

PWA originally asked to operate a morning flight from Victoria to Vancouver that would continue to Prince George and return to Vancouver and Victoria the same morning. A similar flight was proposed for the evening.

The amended application calls for a flight originating in the early morning at Victoria, stopping in Vancouver and continuing to Prince George, Dawson Creek and Edmonton.

Another plane would leave Edmonton in the early morning for Dawson Creek, Prince George, Vancouver and Victoria.

PWA would establish those flights at the end of October if the commission approves the application.

The evening flight from Victoria to Vancouver and Prince George and return would be phased in beginning in April, 1980. The flight would be discontinued from October, 1980, to April, 1981, when it would be scheduled on a permanent basis.

Inflation boosts fares

VANCOUVER (CP) — CP Air announced Friday it is increasing fares on its Skybus flights.

The increases are $6.50 a ticket for the Montreal-Vancouver and Toronto-Vancouver routes, $5.50 for Calgary-Toronto and Edmonton-Toronto, $4 for Winnipeg-Toronto and $3.50 for Winnipeg-Vancouver.

In most cases, Skybus fares, which pay for basic service with no frills, continue to be less than half the regular economy fare.

Rescue the rescuers

It was shortly after 10 p.m. last Monday when Gordon Grenkie realized there was something wrong with his fishboat. He and his crewman were about 10 kilometers off the northern end of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

The 37-year-old fishermen left his mate at the wheel and went to the stern to see if a rope had tangled in one of the propellers. It was then that he apparently fell overboard.

The crewman heard Grenkie's yell for help and ran to the back deck. He threw three life preserveres into the water, then headed back to the wheelhouse to turn the boat around. By the time he had done that, he had lost sight of Grenkie. It was then that he put out a distress call on the radio.

Within minutes the message reached the Rescue Coordination Centre in Victoria. RCC in turn called the Coast Guard district manager in Prince Rupert.

Officials were aware that even if Grenkie didn't drown, he would die of hypothermia if he wasn't found within an hour or two.

The district manager was called because the Coast Guard has a large Sikorsky helicopter permanently stationed in Prince Rupert. The helicopter was the closest government aircraft to the Queen Charlottes and the only one with a chance to get to the scene in time. It would be a 30 to 45 minute flight to the area where Grenkie had fallen into the water.

But the manager refused the request. He refused for the same reasons the Sikorsky has sat out other search and rescue emergencies after dark.

The Sikorsky acts primarily as a supply aircraft for northern lighthouses and is only licenced to fly between airports at night. The defence department has the mandate for airborne search and rescue, not the Coast Guard. The closest DND base was Comox, too far away for a rescue team to reach the scene in time.

The federal government has never provided Coast Guard with the funds to train the Sikorsky pilots for search and rescue, nor equipped the helicopter with proper rescue gear.

Members of Prince Rupert's voluntary search and rescue squad also picked up the distress call from Grenkie's mate. They were frantic. After pleas to the Coast Guard failed, they called the rescue centre to see if another aircraft could be found. Time was ticking away.

The centre told the volunteers to try to charter a helicopter. They did. But none of the privately-owned machines in town were equipped with search lights.

The U.S. Coast Guard was also aware of the distress call. When it became obvious no Canadian aircraft would even attempt the rescue, the Americans sent one of their search and rescue helicopters from Sitka, Alaska. It was a five-hour flight from Sitka, almost as far away as Comox, but the Americans were willing to try. By the time the helicopter reached Canada, it needed to be refueled before it could start the search. A second U.S. helicopter followed the first.

While attempts were made to mobilize aircraft, a fisheries patrol boat and marine research vessel joined Grenkie's mate in the search. It wasn't until the next morning a Canadian Argus patrol aircraft was dispatched from Comox.

The search for Grenkie was called off 24 hours later. He was presumed drowned.

NDP MP Ray Skelly is currently investigating the west coast search and rescue system. He will make recommendations to the government on where improvements should be made.

He should attend the inquest on Grenkie's death. He'll get some hints.

Chinatown is worth saving

By David Lai

Chinatown is a unique component of the urban fabric of North American cities, being physically discernible by its buildings and environs. Old Chinatown is often a blighted neighborhood because it is usually one of the oldest residential and commercial districts in the core or on the downtown fringe. Today Canada still has six inhabited old Chinatowns; in Victoria, Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto, and Montreal, respectively. In the past few years, attitudes towards their future have been changing. City councillors and planners have ceased to program for the demolition of their Chinatown but instead they have carried out measures to preserve it.

Should be treasured

Historically Victoria's Chinatown is the oldest surviving Chinatown in Canada and the second oldest in North America. It remains quite intact and still has a cohesive grouping of heritage buildings which are fine examples of the characteristic Chinatowns of North America.

Between Chinatown's buildings and behind their commercial facades are intricate networks of picturesque arcades, narrow alleys and enclosed courtyards. This hidden section of the nineteenth century Chinatown, which was formerly 'the forbidden city', open only to the Chinese people, has not been drastically changed in its original characteristic.

The city should treasure this undamaged historic district which is a physical reminder of its only ethnic enclave. Chinatown, which is really an extension of Olde Town, could be a distinctive city landmark, should it be preserved, beautified and publicized.

Victoria's Chinatown was once a fully self-contained community and regarded by the Chinese across Canada as their headquarters. It still has many clan and county associations.

To many Chinese people, Chinatown is not only a Chinese renedezvous for social or business gatherings but also their second home. It is the root of the Chinese community. Its demise would be a loss of their identity in the multiethnic society of the city.

But Chinatown today is no longer a place only for the Chinese. It is also a place for people of non-Chinese origin who are interested in Chinese culture and participate in Chinatown's activities.

Should Chinatown be revitalized and its socio-cultural activites be increased, both Chinese and non-Chinese residents of the City would be able to enjoy the fun and pleasure of a lively revived Chinatown.

Property values in Chinatown would increase if its heritage buildings were renovated and fully utilized and unused or under-utilized land was redeveloped. If Chinatown could regain its residential population, its economy would be revived.

Disperse tourists

A revitalized Chinatown might help disperse tourists from the Inner Harbor area to other parts of the downtown commercial district. Chinatown should not be transformed into a "tourist ghetto" but it should be developed into an economically viable entity.

Proposed redevelopment plans for areas near Chinatown would sooner or later threaten its existence and create pressure on its redevelopment. Steps should threfore be taken to preserve its unique characteristics.

In conclusion, the history and functions of Chinatown, combined with the visual appeal of its heritage buildings and picturesque alleys, merit the special attention of the city and the support of its citizens to a preservation and revitalization program of their Chinatown.

Need never have happened

OTTAWA — The worst favor Pierre Trudeau could have done for Bryce Mackasey (and, in the process, for himself) was the favor he did — make Mr. Mackasey the $90,000-a-year chairman of Air Canada.

Mr. Mackasey is a man of many flaws. He is erratic. He is excessively emotional. An "engaging public nuisance" was the way a Globe and Mail editorial once described him. For all his faults, however, Mr. Mackasey was one of those rare politicians who gave politics a good name. In 14 years in Parliament (1962-1976), he cared deeply about his people and his country. He was a passionate federalist, a fervent supporter of bilingualism, an uncompromising liberal.

"This is a man whose heart is with the public," said Mr. Trudeau in 1974, "and I need a guy like that in the cabinet."

No contemporary politician has had a more turbulent career. In and out of the federal cabinet. In and out again. Out of Parliament and into the Quebec National Assembly. Out of there and into a federal byelection in Ottawa Centre last October (and the humiliation of a third-place finish). Into the chairmanship of Air Canada just last Feb. 1. Out of there on his ear this week, unceremoniously fired on the orders of the new Conservative government.

It need never have happened, if Mr. Macaksey had been less ambitious and if Mr. Trudeau had had more common sense. No one would have complained (and Mr. Mackasey would have had the financial security he needs) if the Liberals had appointed him to the Senate, or the National Parole Board, or the Canadian Pension Commission, or any one of the dozen boards and commissions where Mr. Mackasey could have made a useful contribution and drawn a comfortable salary (although maybe only one-third or one-half as much as in the Air Canada job). Consider some of the Liberals Mr. Trudeau rewarded in the dying days of his reign — Joe Flynn, Jean-Robert Roy, Prosper Boulanger, Romeo Beaupre, Dalia Wood. Next to them, Bryce Mackasey is a giant.

But to give him $90,000 a year (plus a chauffeur-driven Lincoln Continental) for seven years to be the figurehead chairman of a state airline which didn't need or want him and gave him little to do except to preside at the occasionaly directors' meetings, was too much. It was a too blatant abuse of the political pork barrel, even in this cynical age.

It would be ridiculous to suggest that the Mackasey appointment brought down the Trudeau government. But it was one of the nails in the coffin. A stir went through his audiences every time Joe Clark mentioned the issue during the election campaign. It reinforced the voters' perception that the Liberals would do anything, that they had no shame, that they had been in power so long that they had lost all sense of proportion, or propriety. "The voters don't care. They expect us to look after our own," a senior Liberal once told me. He was dead wrong. The gross plum handed to Bryce Mackasey served to harden the conviction that it was time for a change.

His dismissal was inevitable There will be no complaint from the public unless the Conservatives turn around the hand thejob to one of their own spear-carriers. It would be better to abolish the position and let Claude Taylor, Air Canada's president, be chairman as well. Or it could be made a part-time job with the chairman chosen from among the airline's directors, paid normal directors' fees plus a supplement of $5,000 or $10,000 a year to chair the meetings.

While it's at it, however, the Clark government could do worse than to borrow a little of Mr. Mackasey's own humanity and find another, more modest niche: in the federal employ for a decent, warm-hearted old pro who has come to a hard end, only partly by his own hand.

Good deal for companies, a bad one for the people

One of the big advantages the oil companies have in current energy discussions is the complexity of the subject. By the time technical matters, international relations, and a wide variety of economic and political concerns have been fitted together, it's just about impossible for the average citizen to decide whether there really is an oil crisis or whether it's a figment of someone's imagination, whether increased oil prices really lead to increased exploration or only to increased prices.

Similarily, the welter of tax exemptions, tax write-offs, royalties and regulations make it exceedingly difficult for any ordinary Canadian to figure out whether nearly all the money he pays for gasoline goes to the government (as the oil companies say) or whether the government in fact gives it back to the oil companies (as academics and the opposition say). If the government is now paying nearly all the oil companies' exploration costs, why do the oil companies need more money for exploration? And so on.

And in the same way, very few B.C. residents are aware of the workings of the B.C. government that allow the same major oil companies to ensure longer-term control of energy resources by taking control over the coal-fields that will doubtless succeed the oil-fields as a main source of energy during the 21st century.

Talk of the Great Coal Giveaway first surfaced publicly in May, 1978. Gordon Gibson, then Liberal leader in the legislature, complained that the government's policy of simple leasing of coal lands to the first applicant was amounting to a giant resource scandal. Major companies, he said, were obtaining rights to much of B.C.'s most valuable coal-fields for little more than the price of a piece of paper.

In 1977, government spokesmen had said that the government was working on a new system for allocating coal lands. The indication was that competitive bidding would be required, as it now is on oil and gas lands. This procedure would have ensured that the public received a fair share of the profits that will soon accrue from coal lands. Another part of the system would have had coal leases allocated on a checkerboard pattern with the government holding back some of the squares for future use.

When Gibson raised the matter in the House, Premier Bennett assured him that a moratorium would be placed on the issuance of licences until a debate had been held in the legislature.

The debate was held, but afterwards the government went right back to the plan it had decided on in February, 1978, after a meeting with spokesmen from the major coal companies: the old system of simple leasing. Abandoned were all thoughts of competitive bidding, bonus payments to the government, or checkerboard patterns. Then-mines minister James Chabot said, with a delightful charm, that the choice had been made because the government was "flexible."

After the decision was made, it took some time to get the system under way again after the moratorium. Only now do figures coming from the mines ministry show that the oil companies have been taking full advantage of the situation. Gulf Canada has already in 1979 obtained 401 separate licences giving it rights to explore on 118,470 hectares of Crown land. (For those unfamiliar with the metric system, that's the equivalent of more than 450 square miles.) Gulf has applied for another 492 licences covering 143,770 hectares.

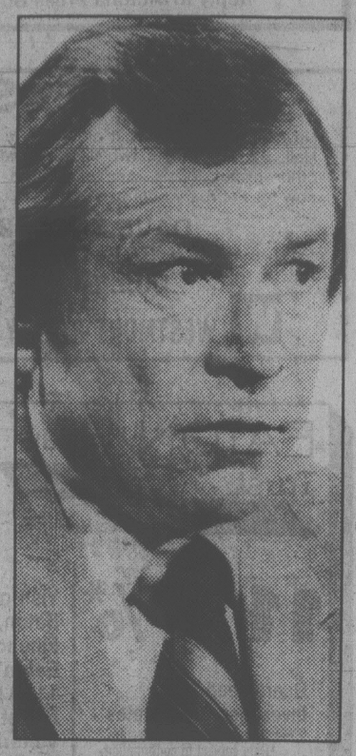
British Petroleum, Shell Canada and Esso are all also getting in on the game, having received or applied for, among them, a total of 223 licences covering 57,374 hectares.

The cost to obtain a licence is little more than the administrative costs of processing it, but in order to keep it the companies must do a minimal amount of work on it each year — from five dollars per hectare the first year, rising to $50 per hectare by the sixth year.

It's quite amazing, especially when compared with the system of oil and gas bidding which brought the government in more than $140 million in 1977-78 (the last year for which full figures are available.)

The oil and coal companies also get a break on royalty payments. They are still paying only $1.50 per ton in royalties, the same as they paid in 1975, even though the price of coal has risen substantially since then. Some Alberta coal companies are now paying as much as $9 per ton to the provincial government.

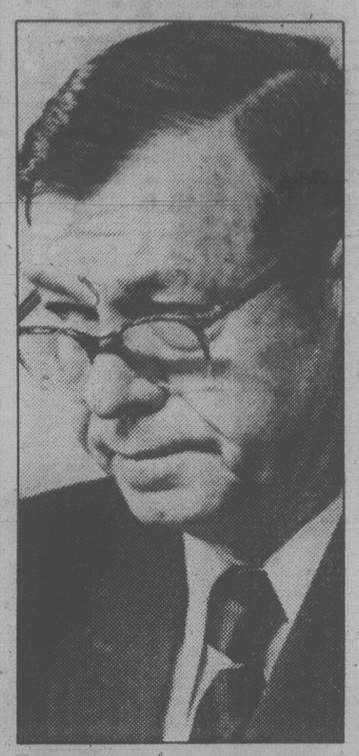
The whole system may be complicated, sure enough, but it's simple enough that all British Columbians should see that it's a good deal for the major oil and coal companies, a bad one for the people of the province.



BAKER . . . property partnership

U.S Congress has become 'a rich man's club'

By ALEX BRUMMER
Manchester Guardian



TALMADGE . . . $2-million farm

WASHINGTON — President Carter, travelling the country on his energy crusade this summer, has regularly berated Congress for failing to give support to his energy proposals, adding that he blames the oil lobby for the lack of progress.

His explanation for failure conjures up images of wealthy Washington lawyers besieging Congressmen in the corridors and in the restaurants of Capitol Hill. But the oil lobby is not a mysterious power broker. It is alive and well in Congress itself.

The Senate finance committee, which is responsible for putting together key energy tax laws including the windfall profits tax on oil companies (the cornerstone of the Administration's program), is the energy lobby.

It's chairman, Russell Long, the Democratic senator from the oil-rich state of Louisiana, just happens to own $1.2 millions worth of oil and gas property; and it just happens that no less than six other members of his committee have extensive holdings in oil stock.

Indeed, members of Congress, who spend so much of their time examining presidential appointees about conflicts of interest questions, are completely surrounded by conflicts of interest of their own. It is estimated that no fewer than 54 out of the U.S.'s 100 senators have conflicts between their personal financial interests and the jobs they perform for powerful Senate committees. And in the House of Representatives an estimated 105 members, out of 435, have potential conflicts.

Many of the conflicts are inconsequential since they are confined to small shareholdings in big corporations. But more serious is the case of the Senate finance and agricultural committees where the conflicts could be a real worry.

In the Senate agricultural committee, for instance, Senator Herman Tamadge, the Democrat from Georgia (who has just been condemned by the Senate ethics committee for improper financial dealings) owns a 1,388-acre farm worth $2 million. Two other members of the committee hold extensive agricultural interests.

The prevalence of conflict of interest was revealed last week in a series of reports and filings required by the Ethics in Government Act 1978. This Act was passed with the aim of improving morality in government in the post-Watergate era. It obliges members of Congress to disclose in detail their financial worth, holdings, and business interests, as well as income acquired through speaking engagements and work on behalf of special interest groups.

As well as disclosing extensive conflicts of interest, the reports produced under the Act show that members of Congress in both houses are by no means typical Americans. The Senate, the more powerful upper house, is almost exclusively a rich man's club. Around one third of the senators have a net worth of more that $1 million and there is another large group not far behind. House of Representatives members are generally not short of the odd cent or two either; at least 25 of them are millionaires and several more near to that.

In contrast, only a handful of members of Congress have little or no outside income or financial assets. Senator Spark Matsunaga, Democrat of Hawaii, has no outside business earnings apart from $7,000 in fees from lectures made in his role as a senator (there is an upper limit of $25,000 on these kind of earnings). And Senator Les Aspin, of Wisconsin, reported he had no outside earnings. But there are few others.

Among the Senate and House millionaires there is a group which can only be classified as the superwealthy. The richest of them all is Senator John Heinz, heir to the H. J. Heinz fortune, whose stockholdings appear to be worth around $50 million — almost a million for each brand.

Senator John Danworth from Missouri is heir to the fortune based on the Ralston Purina company, which among other things is one of the U.S.'s biggest agricultural concerns, and is currently worth in the order of $17 million.

In the House the richest man is probably Fred Richmond, a Democrat from New York, who holds 748,000 shares in Walco, a manufacturer of small machinery, and this holding alone is worth $16 million.

Among the 1980 presidential hopefuls Senator Edward Kennedy looks the most comfortable, although Senator Howard Baker, among the Republican candidates, is no pauper either. Senator Kennedy reported an unearned income of between $288,401 and $581,500 from family trusts and businesses last year. Even if one assumed he was only earning a modest 5 per cent on his investments held in family trusts, this would suggest that his personal share of the Kennedy family fortunes was at least $28 million.

Senator Howard Baker, of Tennessee, the strongest of the moderate Republicans seeking the 1980 nomination, has an unearned income of $328,000, which came largely from sales and interest payments on his share of a property partnership. And Senator Thomas Eagleton, who had to drop out of the vice-presidential stakes in 1972 when a history of mental problems was discovered, earns an income of $100,000 a year from a family firm.

Being an astronaut can also pay off handsomely. Senator John Glenn, who after his 1962 space flight went to work for the Royal Crown Cola and other companies, amassed a huge personal fortune which produces him an income of between $288,000 and $412,000 a year. His investments include partnerships in several Holiday Inn hotels across America as well as substantial property interests.

The remarkable thing about the financial interests of most Senate and House members is how few of them have taken the trouble to place them in trusts to avoid any possible conflicts of interest with their work in the Congress. Many are still involved in the day-to-day decisions over their investments and the businesses which their families run. And unlike the House of Commons there is no formal tradition of announcing an interest before speaking on a subject in committee or to a Bill.

Ellen Goodman

Party-poopers who sleep to a different pendulum

Let me begin in self-defence by saying that I have never put a lamp shade on my head, or ended an evening pleading for another chorus of "Melancholy Baby."

That, as they say, is the good news.

But the fact of the matter is that I have a social flaw forgiven only among octogenarians and people suffering jet lag. I fall asleep at dinner parties.

I always have. When I was eight and at a restaurant, my parents would order dinner and two chairs: one for my head and one for my feet. When I was 17, I was the only one at the senior prom who went into deep REM instead of high gear during the all-night feast.

If the size of my slippers hadn't eliminated any possibility of being cast as Cinderella, the state of my eyelids would have. I never could have stayed at the ball until midnight.

I come by this trait honorably. After years of politics, my father developed catnapping into a fine art. He could fall asleep in the living room — anyone's living room — and wake up ten minutes later insisting that he had just been "resting his eyes." He always managed to look at this, like everything else, positively. He assured me that falling asleep was a symptom of being profoundly relaxed and self-assured.

But virtually everyone else I know considers it a problem. It seems that those of us who follow our internal bedtimes alienate more hosts and hostesses than if we had whistled "Dixie" while chewing saltines over their shag rugs.

They do not think: Isn't it wonderful that she is so comfy in our home! They think: What a creep! They are insulted. In fact, they generally regard a mummy on the sofa with a hostility otherwise reserved for the Early Exiter. Both are taken as proof of a dull evening.

Because of this, we are all required by the rules of modern etiquette to (1) stay late and (2) stay up. I can do one or the other.

Obviously, I am unfit for the wonderful world of grown-ups. A world in which hosts invite guests to dinner at 7:30, expect them at 8:30, feed them at 9:30 and begin ardent discussions with them at 11:30.

Hopelessly gauche, I arrive at 7:30, am famished by 8:30, desperate by 9:30 and asleep by 11:30.

It is a rite of passage to be able to debate SALT at midnight. But the only thing that interests me about Brezhnev at that hour is the 'z', or the "zzzzz."

But people do not invite you over to sleep with them, at least not in the literal sense. The only one I know who completely sympathizes with my plight is the husband of one of my best friends who suffers from the same anti-social disease. We have, in fact, often and publicly slept together. Neither of us took it personally.

I wish I could say that this habit was related to late-night feedings, because the parents of infants are excused for dozing wherever they can. They have a note from the pediatrician. But the only midnight snacks my daughter has these days are taken with friends, cousins and other army ants at what is called a sleepover. (A sleepover is an eat-over with as little sleep as possible.)

Still, I think that those of us who fade early and often are not bored, rude or miserable. It's just that we live on our own daylight saving time. We go through life as if everyone else were in California and we just arrived from the East Coast.

We are a much maligned and guilt-ridden minority which sleeps to the beat of a different pendulum.

After all, people are not considered anti-social if they refuse to speak before 10 a.m. We do not shun friends because they doze at dawn and are incoherent at breakfast. Being cranky before coffee is considered sophisticated, adult.

Yet, most of us who sleep after dinner are utterly scintillating over orange juice. We are astute with our eggs. We peak at about 9 a.m. And are made to feel guilty, rather overbearing, for that, too.

I think it is high time that we stopped feeling responsible for the droop of our eyelids. Am I my eyelids' keeper? I intend to hold an elegant breakfast party, promptly at six in the morning. Anyone who is unable to discuss nuclear energy over cantaloupe will be cast asunder.

Letters to the editor

Students affected

I would like to reply to the letter "Watching Fraser" published in the Times Sept. 12.

The author is under a serious misapprehension when she states that the opposition to the McKenzie extension arises from a "small group of people who feel their property values are at stake." The issue at stake is much more fundamental than that.

For example, the proposed McKenzie extension would pass directly in front of McKenzie Elementary School, which is now on a quiet cul-de-sac. Since Carey Road will feed into the new extension, the intersection of Carey and McKenzie where the school is located will become a major intersection. There are two hundred elementary schoolchildren and 100 junior high pupils who have to cross that road daily. Given the fact that many elementary pupils go home for lunch, this adds up to at least 800 pupil-crossings per day.

Putting the extension through will also be extremely costly and disruptive. Plans call for a diamond interchange at Douglas, and a fly-over at Interurban. The total estimated cost of the project is $8 million.

If Saanich council had shown responsible public planning over the last few years there would be fewer grounds for objection. But it has allowed major housing developments to locate close to the right-of-way, thus increasing the population density of the area and compounding the problem. Aldermen Severson and Noel, and Mayor Mel Couvelier were on Council in 1974. If the proposed extension of McKenzie Avenue was so vital to Victoria, why did they push through a high-density housing project (Passmore Place) next to the proposed route over local opposition? Similarly, why did the municipality approve the Arlene Place subdivision in 1975, on a site immediately adjacent to the highway?

Ms. Clarke states that only a few property values will be affected, whereas in fact 18 homes will be expropriated outright, and many more residents will have their property cut back or be negatively affected by the nearness of the highway. The planning branch of the department of highways suggests that municipalities post large signs indicating a highway right-of-way, so that home buyers will not be deceived when they move into an area. Again, this has not been done in Saanich. Saanich Council has shown a serious lack of public responsibility in this matter.

The question which should be asked about the proposed McKenzie extension is whether it justifies the enormous social and economic costs involved. If a better link is needed between the two highways, this is certainly not the most economic way to achieve it. Residents of the area should ask themselves whether they want their part of Saanich to be a place to live in, or a place to pass through. If Saanich continues to press this project, the answer will likely be made at the forthcoming municipal election. And yes, Alex Fraser, we're watching you too. — E. Preston, 650 Coleos Place.

Appalling situation

To the best of my knowledge when the education budget for "Aids to the Handicapped" was cut last May, there was no mention of it in your newspaper. I would like to call attention to this omission now that Gordon Hanson has brought the matter up in the legislative house.

It seems to me that if anything the budget should have been increased, but instead it was slashed by one-third from $150,000 to $90,000. Many students have lost their grants completely and will be unable to return to school this fall. For the remainder fortunate enough to receive continued assistance, their monthly living allowance has been reduced from $285 monthly to $260 during the school term.

For those permanently on the handicapped pension of $357 per month the budget could hardly have been called generous to start with. In order to go to school they are required to carry a full course load and suffer such an enormous cut in their allowance that in fact, the cost of fees, books and transportation is deducted from their yearly allotment. In essence the disabled pay their own way through school on an income already below the poverty level.

After spending thousands of dollars to supply the university with ramps and braille room numbers, etc. to facilitate handicapped students on campus, it seems ludicrous to now prevent them from attending. True, the campus is a showpiece for visiting dignitaries but this alone hardly justifies the endeavor.

In an effort to cope with the reduced budget and provide education for as many disabled as possible, the "Aid to Handicapped Association" was forced to refuse funds to the university students first as they represent the largest expenditure. Where possible the students are being channelled into short-term training programs which are far less costly. I appreciate Mr. Hanson's efforts to help and can only hope that those in a position to rectify this appalling situation will hear and heed his recommendations.—Elaine McKinney, 411B Vancouver Street.

Share the burden

Under the title "Deficit Hits $3.5 billion level" your informative daily tells us once more that, "as its debts increase, a country risks losing its good credit rating, which means its currency starts to lose value on world money markets."

We, the people, are warned by the president of the Treasury Board that if current trends are allowed to continue, 28 cents out of every tax dollar will be needed by 1982-83 to pay interest on the debts this country is accumulating. Figures and warning, however, seem to fall on deaf ears as every sector of our society is demanding more and more, and willing to give less. It is difficult, however, to blame Canadians for the fact that already 16.4 per cent of federal spending goes in interest payments. Surely guidance and restraint should start at the top, but this is not the case. Every time we go over a newspaper, or watch/listen to news and commentaries from various sources, we notice that more expenditures are occuring or are in the planning. Of late, another commission has been appointed to study the problem of unification of our armed forces; more Senate vacancies are expected to be filled; the metric system is to be expanded and soon. Cabinet ministers, M.P.s, MLAs, etc. gave themselves a substantial pay raise and what is even more important, a considerable tax exemption on large portions of their income. How can the governments, at all levels, deny the small Joes and Janes of this country a bit of a tax cut when they themselves are making no efforts at all to eome to grip with our debts problems.

It is futile to ask for restraint and sacrifices and unjust to impose them unless the burden is fairly shared by all segments of society. It seems, however, that those who have the least are asked or forced to give the most. A more equitable way to deal with our economy must be found because without a whole-hearted cooperation of the people, no government can succeed. If the government wants (and needs) the trust of all Canadians, it must prove beyond the shadow of doubt that it deserves it. Unhappily — so far — it hasn't. — E. J. Lattes, 432-200 Dallas Road.

Support buses

I read with interest the news item (Times, Sept. 12) concerning two Sidney businessmen who want to run a daily bus service from Victoria to Butchart Gardens for local residents.

In my opinion this is a service long overdue, and I congratulate these gentlemen on their initiative, as would, I am sure, many others who are without transportation of their own.

The intermunicipal committee should grant speedy approval of this application; and I would urge all pensioners and others to give active support to this excellent proposal. — William Whiteman, 4-1527 Camosun Street.

GM, Ford sales boom

The Canadian Press

Car sales in Canada, including imports, totalled 711,448 for the first eight months of this year, a healthy 2 per cent increase over the record 698,413 sold in the same period in 1978.

With the promise of more sales in the fall as the new 1980 models are introduced, General Motors of Canada Ltd. is the big winner. It reported record-breaking sales for August, the seventh consecutive month it has done so.

"This string of monthly records is unprecedented in GM's history," said Richard M. Colcomb, vice-president and general sales manager.

Records were also set in trucks with 271,662 sold in the first eight months of the year, a 16 per cent increase from the 233,713 sold in the same 1978 span.

August sales figures released this week showed Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. sold about the same number of cars as it did in the same month a year ago while Chrysler Canada Ltd. fell behind.

American Motors (Canada) Ltd., reaping the boom in small cars owing to the energy scare, reported a 26 per cent increase in sales with 1,600 deliveries compared with 1,269 in the same month last year.

Its Jeep sales dropped for the first time in several years, with 500 vehicles delivered compared with 568 in August of 1978.

In August, GM sold 32,601 cars, exceeding last August's record of 30,563 by 6.7 per cent. Truck sales were 12,251, close to the record 12,459 of August, 1978.

Ford sold 15,764 cars in August compared with 15,805 in the same month last year. Truck sales for the month were a record 10,352, an increase of 4.5 per cent from the previous August high of 9,905 set last year. It was the fifth monthly truck sales record for Ford.

At Windsor, Ont., Chrysler reported car sales of 12,192 compared with 13,895 for August of a year ago. Chrysler sold 3,172 trucks last month compared with 3,743 in August, 1978.

Largest 6-month auto deficit

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada chalked up the largest six-month deficit in the history of its automotive trade with the United States this year, government figures released Friday show.

Statistics Canada reported the auto trade deficit reached $1.46 billion by June 30, an increase of more than 300 per cent compared with the $334-million deficit recorded in the first half of 1978.

The 1979 six-month deficit is higher than the entire annual deficit in auto trade with the U.S. for every year for which records have been kept, with the exception of 1975 when the deficit reached its previous record of $1.92 billion. Unless there is a dramatic reversal of trade patterns, the country is headed for the highest auto trade deficit ever this year.

The main reason for the abrupt jump in the deficit was a large increase in imports of both vehicles and parts.

Imports of fully-assembled cars increased over last year by 22 per cent and imports of parts during the first six months of 1979 were 21 per cent higher than for the corresponding period last year.

During the same period, exports of assembled cars increased by just 3.9 per cent and parts exports were up 16 per cent.

Last year — when the automotive deficit with the U.S. was $562 million — the federal government, following repeated charges that the terms of trade between the two countries favor the Americans, called for a full inquiry into the industry.

One of the key questions was whether the 1965 Automotive Trade Agreement, known as the Auto Pact, between the two countries was out-of-date.

Canada has had repeated deficits in its auto trade with the U.S. since 1973.

Warden shot

BELFAST (Reuter) — Gunmen shot and killed an assistant prison warden in his car as he waited at a traffic light, Northern Ireland police said. The man died instantly in a hail of bullets fired from a car which pulled up alongside.

TV anti-dump rule dies

OTTAWA (CP) — The government announced today it is rescinding a five-year old ruling that color television sets from Japan, Taiwan and Singapore are being dumped on the Canadian market.

The anti-dumping agency also ruled that compressed air sprayers, produced by several U.S. companies are not being dumped on the Canadian market.

Mexican firm buys M-F subsidiary

TORONTO (CP) — Alfa, S.A., of Monterrey, Mexico has signed an agreement to buy Massey-Ferguson de Mexico S.A. for an undisclosed price.

The announcement was made by Toronto-based Massey-Ferguson Ltd., the financially-troubled multinational maker of farm machinery.

Alfa was described as a major company with interests in a number of Mexican enterprises, including steel, chemicals and electronics.

Alfa will continue producing Massey-Ferguson products under licence in Mexico.

Massey's Mexican operation has been producing agricultural and industrial implements since 1967. It had sales in 1978 of $64 million.

Chamber fights proposal to end capital gains tax

By ESTELLE DORAIS

MONTREAL (CP) — A contentious proposal by small- and medium-sized businesses urging the abolition of the capital gains tax will be opposed by leaders of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce when it starts its 50th annual meeting in Vancouver Sunday.

The leaders fear abolition of the tax could backfire and they would also lose a tax break on dividends which has offset the tax.

The group is also to hear a policy speech by Economic Development Minister Robert de Cotret.

Chamber president Sam Hughes said in a recent interview he doesn't know what the speech will cover but predicted it would be "interesting in light of an impending speech from the throne a couple of weeks from now."

Hughes said abolishing the capital gains tax could well boomerang. A tax break on dividends which has offset the tax might be lost and "other things could happen such as the provinces getting back into succession duties."

"These are potential things that people who are not specialists in taxation don't see," he said.

"They can't — and that's what the taxation committee is going to have to explain."

The committee will try in debate Monday to convince the expected 450 voting delegates to drop the abolition proposal and push instead to have the tax lowered.

"It's very tough for a roomful of delegates to stop and consider (the taxation committee's) pedantic, professional advice," he added. "They'll want to vote with their hearts."

Another emotional debate is expected on resolutions by the Regina and Winnipeg chambers of commerce on grain marketing boards.

Regina favors the bureaucratic system of marketing boards while Winnipeg, where the wheat board is headquartered, wants a minimum of bureaucratic control and a maximum of free enterprise.

"It's a contentious issue because it's too emotional — it's not just economic," Hughes said.

The lack of any resolution on unemployment insurance is surprising, he said, but is probably due to the government's commitment to review the program.

However, resolutions urging the abolition of the right to strike in essential services and opposing the indexation of civil service pensions will be debated.

Hughes said Ottawa will pay attention to the results of the policy session.

"These days (the chamber) is important. It is not a bunch of red-neck businessmen.

"We've sweated here over the last couple of years to get the chamber positions perceived by the public as being socially and economically responsible and we've succeeded."

Probes irk Eldorado

OTTAWA (CP) — The president of Eldorado Nuclear Ltd., the Crown corporation that mines, refines and markets uranium, has called for an end to what he says is a repetitious round of inquiries into the nuclear industry.

"The seeming endless repetition of nuclear inquiries — seven since 1974 — must end," N. M. Ediger said Thursday in a speech to the Canadian Club.

Ediger criticized what he said amounts to a competition between federal and provincial governments to "out-inquiry" each other.

Joke backfires

COPENHAGEN (Reuter) — Six bored soldiers decided to brighten up the evening by shooting blank ammunition at a car in Copenhagen. But their victim, picked at random, turned out to be Finance Minister Knud Heinesen who thought he was being assassinated. The police were called out in force and soon tracked down the soldiers.

Death threats for dental exec

VANCOUVER (CP) — A letter sent to members of the British Columbia College of Dental Surgeons claims college registrar Dr. Roy Thordarson is under police protection following a series of death threats.

The letter from college president Ted Ramage says the threats have been made in letters sent to the college and telephone calls to his home at night.

In response, the dentist's home and office telephones have been put under surveillance, college office doors are being kept locked, police are patrolling Thordarson's neighborhood, his children are being driven to school and an alarm system has been installed at his home.

Ramage's letter was in reply to charges by college treasurer Dr. Murray Bloom that a $1,700 alarm system, installed at college expense, was not properly authorized.

The letter gave no reason for the threats. However, the college is responsible for disciplining and licensing the province's dentists, and the college says the threats were clearly related to Thordarson's position as registrar.

The letter states the expenditure for the alarm system was discussed and approved by college executives, but not recorded in minutes because the police had recommended the matter be kept confidential.

Seiners get lobby

VANCOUVER (CP) — More than 100 Vancouver-based fishermen have formed the British Columbia Salmon Seiners Association aimed at pressuring Ottawa into giving them a larger share of B.C.'s salmon fishery.

SeaBus ferry fears planes

VANCOUVER (CP) — Captains of SeaBus ferries between Vancouver and North Vancouver say increasing float plane traffic in the harbor is endangering public safety.

Although SeaBus management and pilots who fly regularly into the harbor say there is no cause for concern, the men at the controls of the 400-passenger ferries disagree.

Some say there have been several near-misses with planes in the two years since SeaBus began operating, adding that a major disaster is probably inevitable.

"I've just come off 21 days straight and I could count five to 10 of what I call close calls during that time," said Capt. Gary McRae.

"But then, what's close? If he's airborne and right in front of me, is that close? If he's 30 feet above the water, he's cleared me by half an inch. Is that an incident? I don't know. But we have had a lot of input from passengers who have really been scared.

"My concern is for my passengers. I have 400 warm bodies on that thing. If one of those turbo-props carrying 12 passengers and God knows how many gallons of fuel smacks up against me and spreads its fuel and ignites, there's going to be one hell of a disaster."

McRae and several other captains say aircraft landings and takeoffs should be confined to a designated area in Coal Harbor. They also want improved communications between vessel traffic management and harbor air traffic control.

"If we have a close-quarter situation and want to get in touch with ATC (air traffic control), we have to get off the boat and call them on a land line."

Vancouver harbor handles more float plane traffic than any city in North America.

Last spring Victoria banned from its inner harbor all but existing commerical carriers, a move that was opposed by non-scheduled carriers, corporate and private plane owners.

Don Mills, superintendent of airways for Transport Canada, said pilots flying in and out of Vancouver have more room to manoeuvre than they do in Victoria and don't approach over the city as they do in the capital.

Barber blasts paper ploy

By PAUL NICHOLSON

Despite criticism from the NDP over the past 18 months, Premier Bill Bennett continues to use official government stationery to solicit new memberships to the Social Credit Party.

"Mr. Bennett hasn't learned a thing from his near defeat in May," Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber said Friday. "The arrogance and abuse roll on unchanged."

Barber will ask Auditor-General Erma Morrison to assess the cost of the premier's membership drive and then he will look for some way to make Bennett and the party reimburse the Crown.

Barber earlier charged Bennett with "degrading his office" for using the embossed bond stationery with the seal of the province of B.C. over the heading office of the premier and signed by Bennett, to recruit party members.

He said there was nothing wrong with soliciting memberships, but said Bennett "should do it as leader, not premier, and make the Social Credit Party pay for it while he's at it."

When he learned the practice was still being carried out at least as late as last month, Barber said Bennett continues to "cheapen the office of premier to tout memberships in the party."

"Bennett is making the taxpayers pay for thousands of letters his own party should be financing. Those letters are an abuse of office."

At the time of the earlier NDP criticism, Bennett said he doesn't consider the practice wrong. He said he pays the postage for the letters.

The letter thanks the recipient for either joining the party or renewing his membership and then asks him to "be part of my own special membership drive."

Five membership application forms are included with the letter.

"Perhaps you know some friends or relatives who would like to become members," the letter continues.

It asks the recipient to use the applications "to bring fellow British Columbians into membership of the Party."

Bennett is out of town and a spokesman in party headquarters would only say his office has had nothing to do with the program.

"It's their thing," he said of Bennett and his executive director Tony Tozer. "They run it."

A Vancouver man who asked not to be identified received one of the letters after joining the party and immediately turned around and resigned in anger at such tactics.

Vantreight seeking 2nd term

Ald. Geoffrey Vantreight has announced he will seek a second two-year term on Saanich council in November's municipal elections.

Vantreight topped the polls in his first bid for office in 1977 and has been a controversial figure since his election.

The terms of four aldermen are expiring: Vantreight, Fred Severson, Howard Sturrock and David Paterson.

Paterson has already announced he will not seek re-election.

There are two candidates for the four seats so far: Vantreight and former alderman Ian Cass.

The term of Mayor Mel Couvelier also expires in November. Couvelier has not yet announced whether he will seek re-election.

Caucus juggled

A shuffle of the old and new guards has occurred in the top positions of the New Democratic Party caucus.

Graham Lea of Prince Rupert takes over from Karen Sanford of Comox as caucus chairman.

Frank Howard of Skeena replaces William King of Shuswap-Revelstoke as house leader. And Colin Gabelmann of the North Island riding will the party whip for the next session of the legislature, taking over from Dennis Cocke of New Westminster.

Delegates to a three-day provincial meeting of the party also elected Norm Levi of Maillardville-Coquitlam caucus vice-chairman.

Scholarships awarded

Three third-year law students at the University of Victoria will have their final year's tuitions paid for them by a Victoria law firm.

Robert Farley, 1918 Ashgrove, Lewis Marshall, 2895 Inlet, and Earl Phillips, 2072 Cadboro Bay, are winners of Crease and Company scholarships for 1979-80.

Another student, Sheridan Scott, 3987 Wolf, picked up $500 capturing the Wootton scholarship.

Claudia Herbert, 4942 Prospect, received the Martlet chapter, IODE scholarship in law, worth $150.

Book prizes from J. Lyle Wilson went to Earl Phillips and Thomas Manson of Vancouver.

The top student in the 1979 graduating class, the second since the school opened in 1975, was Charles Willms of Vancouver.

HOT POTATO TREATMENT is given baseball by Chicago second-baseman Mick Kelleher, who fails for second time in attempt to scoop up ball as Pittsburgh slugger Dave Parker slides in with double during sixth inning of National League game Friday in Chicago. Kelleher and rest of Cubs grabbed ball often enough to beat Pirates 2-0 and drop Pittsburgh game behind Montreal.

IDLE EXPOS GAIN; BUCS LOSE

Astros crowd Reds in West

Times News Services

It was a classic matchup of pitchers in series that probably will help determine one of the combatants in the National League playoffs.

J. R. Richard, Houston Astros' right-handed strikeout artist, went against Tom Seaver of Cincinnati Reds, still one of pitching's top technicians even after losing some speed to age.

In the end, though, neither really won.

The 29-year-old Richard toiled through 11 innings. He escaped a couple of early jams, yielded just seven hits and struck out 15, equalling his career high. The Reds scored two runs off him.

Seaver, 34, went nine innings. He scattered eight hits and allowed two runs, one unearned. He fanned five.

Neither, however, was around in the 13th inning when Bruce Bochy, who came in for Houston to catch in the ninth, slapped a run-scoring single that gave the Astros a 3-2 victory. The Astros thus closed to within 1½ games of Cincinnati in the National League West.

In the other divisional pennant race, Montreal Expos picked up another half game on Pittsburgh Pirates by default. The Expos' game at Philadelphia Phillies was rained out and will be played as part of a doubleheader today. The Pirates, meanwhile, lost 2-0 to the Chicago Cubs and now trail Montreal by a full game. Pittsburgh and Montreal begin a four-game series Monday in Pittsburgh.

Reliever Joe Sambito, 8-4, picked up the win for Houston and the loser was Tom Hume, 10-9.

Lynn McGlothen, who has not signed a new contract and could become a free agent at the end of the season, tossed a four-hitter for Chicago over the Pirates.

Rookie Scot Thompson drove in both of the Cubs' runs with a single in the fifth.

Getting his first major league homers at a most opportune time for Kansas City Royals, Washington first belted a three-run shot from the left side of the plate, then jolted another three-blast from the right.

Washington's wallops were among a bunch of big hits that helped Kansas City rout Oakland 13-4 and stay in contention in the American League West.

The Royals moved to within two games of California Angels, who dropped a 3-1 decision to Texas Rangers.

Ken Landreaux hit a two-run homer with one out in the Minnesota ninth and Butch Wynegar followed with a bases-empty shot, rallying the Twins over Milwaukee.

At Anaheim, Calif., Buddy Bell's two-run double in the seventh inning lifted the Rangers to their victory.

Bill Walker

Hey Steve! What happened to the 300 per cent more?

It was rather interesting to read that Steve Paproski, federal minister of fitness and amateur sport, had trimmed travel subsidies for 22 Universities in the Canada West, Great Plains and Atlantic conferences from $450,000 to $290,000, especially in lieu of what he had said earlier.

It was at the Canadian National Exhibition Sports Day luncheon when Paproski promised that amateur athletes "will receive 300 per cent more" financial aid than they got under the previous Liberal government.

Paproski also accused the former government of "failing to take positive action in assisting amateur athletes."

"I do not say that with any malice to any of my colleagues I'm replacing," Paproski said. "They tried. But they had a bunch of bureaucrats there who were just not aware of what sports is all about.

"Now they've got a minister who is not going to be baffled by all that . . . bureaucratic structure."

So who is baffled now? Only everybody.

Because that was in August and that was after he had already told the Canadian Inter-University Athletic Union that the cutback would be in effect. Matter of fact the original amount authorized for travel in 1979-80 was only $190,000. And it was only after a delegation from the three conferences met with the minister that the commitment was raised by $100,000 to the present $290,000.

On the positive side, it is also known that the minister has been made fully aware of the problems caused by the cutback and has promised to review the case; and CIUAA officials are hopeful that, even if full amount is not restored, a proper funding program will be the result.

Still that doesn't explain that mysterious 300 per cent and where it is going if the schools can't have it. Does it?

Otherwise, it's almost curling time again. And the good news is that the 1979 Curling Classic slated for Playland Curling Club the weekend of Nov. 29, has drawn some of the big names of the West.

Entries to date include 1978 Canadian champion Ed Lukowich, former world junior champion Paul Gowsell, present world junior champion Don Barcome, Jr., of Grand Forks, North Dakota; former B.C. champion Bernie Sparkes, Frank Morissette, Calgary Super League winner and Southern Alberta Consols rep; B.C. champion Glen Pierce, George Fink of Calgary and Rick Folk of Saskatoon, 1978 and 1979 Brier rep for Saskatchewan. With more to come.

The other news is that reserved seats for all draws will go for $30 and $20 with non-reserved seats for the four days, $6.00, a daily pass $2.

Before that, of course, comes other action such as the Super League, which isn't under that banner any more.

No, now there's a sponsor and the league henceforth will be known as The Harley Davidson Series of Curling. And there it is to keep the record straight.

There will 10 teams, an increase of two from last year and the skips are: Bob Hawkes, Brad Clarke, Steve Skillings, Don Matheson, Al Frame, Barry Harvey, Tim Horrigan, Bruce Coulter, Bill Morriss and Barry Moore. A comeventuality.

The Moore entry is a junior rink which wants the competition to prepare itself for hopefully any national eventualty.

Dave Lindsay is league president, Rob Cummings, secretary and Bob Odeh, treasurer. Committee members are Ernie Hawkins and Don Nemeth and Steve Beggs, publicity.

Play will be at the Racquet Club on Tuesdays at 9 p.m., starting Oct. 2 with a double round-robin schedule.

First place will be worth $900, second place $540 and third place $360. In addition each rink will receive $20 for every game won. Yes, sponsors are needed.

And so what else is new? Nothing in the recent story that was headlined: "Bodychecking outlawed from peewee level down". It all happened before.

It was 20 years ago that Eddie Kelpin of our town introduced a BCHA ban on hitting that included bantam, midget and juvenile divisions. And the delegates agreed then that more skating and less hitting was ideal. Sixteen years later the ban was rescinded by what Kelpin calls "TV fans cum minor hockey coaches" based on the theory that "they can't score on us lying down."

Eddie also makes the point that as most B.C. boys have to learn their hockey in covered rinks where ice time is scarce, they need every minute of skating they can get and the boarding and piling up in the corners is a waste of good skating time.

Defencemen pack punch

By Canadian Press

Offence is the best defence, or so the sports bromide goes.

Two National Hockey League teams embraced that particular cliche Friday night in pre-season play by turning defencemen loose on attack and both came out winners as Boston Bruins defeated Philadelphia Flyers, 5-3 and Washington Capitals downed Pittsburgh Penguins 7-3.

Dick Redmond was the offensive star for Boston's blueline corps as he scored three goals in the Bruins' exhibition opener.

The Washington crew was a little more sociable in its scoring as four members of its defence accounted for six of the seven goals.

In other games, Montreal Canadiens started where they left off as they bounced Buffalo Sabres 5-2 to ruin the homecoming of ex-Montreal coach Scotty Bowman and Atlanta Flames and Minnesota North Stars skated to a 2-2 deadlock.

Rick MacLeish had a pair Flyer goals, with Paul Holmgren notching the other.

John Wensink had the opening goal for the Bruins in the first period. Jean Ratelle added the final Boston goal into an empty net.

Pierre Bouchard and Rick Green each scored two goals in leading the Capitals.

Peter Lee, Greg Malone and Rod Schutt replied for the Penguins.

Montreal made the coaching debut of Bernard Geoffrion a successful one.

The Canadiens got goals from winger Mario Tremblay, centre Doug Risebrough, forward Pierre Larouche, winger Steve Shutt and defenceman Serge Savard.

Bowler-of week contest rules set

Bowlers on the southern end of Vancouver Island have one more week to tune up their arms in preparation for the opening on Sept. 29 of the 17th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest.

The competition, which runs from Saturday morning to the following Friday night each week, is held at all lanes in the Greater Victoria, Sidney, Duncan, Chemainus, Lake Cowichan and Youbou areas.

All bowlers competing in regular league play are eligible for the contest and the bowler rolling the highest three-game scratch total in each of four categories — men's and women's fivepins and men's and women's tenpins — during each week will be declared Bowler-of-the-Week.

The contest runs for 26 weeks, with the exception of a two-week Christmas break from Dec. 22 to Jan. 4.

Bowlers may win only one award in each category.

In case of a tie, the bowler rolling the highest single game will be declared the winner. If this fails to break the tie, the bowler with the second highest single game will be declared the winner.

Winners of weekly awards will receive a crest, have their scores announced in the Times and become eligible to compete in the season-ending Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

Rolloffs will also be decided on the basis of a three-game scratch series and trophies will be presented to the champions in each of the four categories.

Winners of rolloff titles who are daily subscribers to the Victoria Times will receive a bonus reward of $150.

Cougars looking good

UVic hosts Bristol teams

University of Victoria rugby sides will square off with touring teams from the University of Bristol, England, Sunday at UVic's McCoy Field.

The UVic Norsemen face Bristol seconds at 1 p.m. while the Vikings tackle the firsts at 2:30.

Things may be considerably more difficult for Victoria Cougars at home on Thursday night, but the Cats have been looking good during a seven-game training tour prior to the start of the Western Hockey League season.

The Cougars completed their exhibition jaunt with New Westminster Bruins with four victories, one tie and two defeats by topping the Bruins in a 2-1 squeaker Friday night at Mill Bay Recreation Centre.

Rookie Grant Fuhr gave the Victorians great goaltending before about 700 spectators and clubmates Daryl Coldwell and Torrie Robertson scored second-period goals in the game that produced three major penalties for fighting for each club in the third period.

Fuhr, who yielded an early goal to Doug Hall and then stopped Hall on a penalty shot later in the first period, finished with a total of 44 saves.

Cougars open their training camp Monday at Memorial Arena and their final pre-season exhibition is scheduled at the arena Thursday, when the Cats try their luck against the Vancouver Canuck rookies.

In other WHL exhibitions Friday, Regina Pats bopped the Medicine Hat Tigers 5-2, Saskatoon Blades outgunned Brandon Wheat Kings 8-4 and Lethbridge Broncos tripped Moose Jaw Canucks 3-1.

First woman professional champion

LONDON (Reuter) — Lene Koppen of Denmark scored a history-making victory today in the Masters, the world's first open badminton championship.

Koppen, the world, European and all-England champion, defeated Gillian Gilks of Britain 12-10 11-4 in the women's singles final to become the first winner of a tournament involving professionals.

In the men's final, Padukone Prakash of India beat Morten Frost of Denmark 15-4, 15-11.

Sports 'wheels' have a friend in Glenn

Dr. Cornwell with orthotics and sporthotics

By JIM CRERAR

Athletes have known for years that to be a winner, you must start at the bottom — with the feet. If the wheels don't work, you don't go anywhere.

Now doctors, notably specialists in pediatrics and sports medicine, are doing something about it.

One of them is Glenn Cornwell, a 34-year-old doctor of podiatric medicine.

A San Francisco native and graduate of the California College of Podiatric Medicine, he set up practice in Victoria four years ago after visiting the area on a camping trip with his son.

He spends up to 20 per cent of his working day treating sports-related injuries among joggers, golfers, skiers, track and field athletes, basketball, soccer and tennis players.

Many sports ailments stem from abnormally-shaped feet at birth, he explains

"I would say that 50 per cent of the people who run have problems with their feet. But even those with normal feet can develop problems because of excessive weight or over-use, like running 50 miles a week."

Among ailments related to foot abnomalities are Achilles tendonitis, heel spurs, pains in the balls of the feet, shin splints, knee pains and chronic ankle sprains.

Cornwell specializes in biomechanics, or movement of the foot and how it affects movement of the body.

Since he has been in Victoria he has treated about 3,000 patients and and of the 20 per cent that are sports-related, most involve joggers.

"They'll do anything to keep running," Cornwell said. "It's just amazing what happens. So many treat the symptom and not the cause. By the time they get to me they've had cortisone and ultra-sound. I treat the cause instead of the symptom."

So do several other foot specialists, but Cornwell treats many of his athletic cases with a product called a sporthotic, a foot support manufactured in New York designed to structurally realign the foot.

Sporthotics and orthotics, another type of support he uses mainly for non-athletic ailments, differ from an ordinary arch support in that they move with the foot.

Cornwell first diagnoses the ailment, makes a plastercast impression of the foot, then makes an orthotic or sporthotic to correct the foot's alignment.

It can be a long and expensive process, taking weeks and sometimes months before the ailment is cured. In the U.S., Cornwell said, the cost of sporthotics and treatment can run above $500 but in B.C. medicare cuts the average cost to the patient to about $120.

Who uses them? In the Victoria area, tennis pro Russ Hartley, basketball player Varick Cutler, track star Judy Tobacco and Cornwell himself, who uses an orthotic to correct a foot alignment problem.

His most celebrated case, however, is basketball player Craig Higgins, a B.C. high school all star at Oak Bay two years ago who was sidelined last year because of torn knee ligaments.

Higgins, a guard, is trying out again this season with UVic Vikings and is wearing a jogging type orthotic that Cromwell has modified for basketball in an attempt to ease the strain on the injured knee.

Boxer's appeal denied

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — James Scott will be doing all his fighting inside Rahway State Prison for the time being after his plea for bail was denied.

Judge Nicholas Scalera, citing Scott's past criminal record, rejected a bid for bail pending appeal of the light-heavyweight boxer's 1975 robbery and armed robbery conviction.

Scott, the No. 2 ranked light-heavyweight by the World Boxing Association, is not eligible to fight outside the maximum security prison. He has been unable to lure the top contenders to prison to fight and the WBA won't sanction a title fight behind bars.

Gillis, Blight in spotlight as Canucks here Monday

Vancouver Canucks break camp at Powell River today and head for Vancouver for the start of an exhibition hockey swing that will have them playing at Victoria's Memorial Arena Monday night against Los Angeles Kings.

The Canucks open their pre-season schedule Sunday night in Pacific Coliseum against the Kings and the spotlight in early exhibition tests will fall squarely on two players once highly regarded, but now considered to be on the comeback trail.

At the relatively youthful ages of 23 and 22, respectively, Rick Blight and Jere Gillis have embarked on comeback attempts with the Canucks in hopes of prolonging their National Hockey League careers.

Blight and Gillis are coming off unproductive seasons and it is felt by coach Harry Neale that performances from the young wingers will have a definite effect on the playoff hopes of the Canucks in the Smythe Division of the National Hockey League.

After scoring 23 goals as a rookie, Gillis dropped off to just 13 markers last season and his frustration was evident.

Blight went through an even deeper slump, dropping from 25 goals the previous season to a meager five, and took an ego-deflating trip to the minor leagues in mid-season.

Gillis faces a strong challenge at left wing where the Canucks are best stocked. There's 40-goal man Ron Sedlbauer, team-captain Don Lever, second-year pro Curt Fraser, aggressive Brad Gassoff and under-age draftee Brent Ashton.

At six feet and 190 pounds, Gillis has the size to be useful in the corners and in front of the net. He has been aggressive at times the last two seasons, but mostly he relies on skills developed as a junior in Quebec.

One thing in Gillis' favor is his penalty-killing ability. He combined with Lever late last season to give the Canucks their best penalty-killing combination in years.

Blight scored 25, 28 and 25 goals during his first three seasons with the Canucks before slumping last year. He's had a few injury problems but the knock against him has been his over-all physical conditioning and his skating.

The right winger doesn't face the opposition, however, that Gillis does for a position. Right wing is an easier mark, with only rookie Rick Vaive and second-year pro Stan Smyl apparently assured of positions.

The Canucks are also counting on some other comebacks in 1979-80. Goaltender Glen Hanlon, defenceman Kevin McCarthy and centre Bill Derlago are coming back off serious injuries.

Neale seems confident the attitude showed last season when the Canucks made the playoffs and extended Philadelphia Flyers to a deciding game in the opening Stanley Cup series before losing, will carry over into the coming season.

The coach says there will be some changes in personnel this season, which leaves Blight and Gillis fighting for their jobs.

It's a challenge they claim they're willing to accept.

Thistles tough on attackers

Sometimes it gets downright discouraging for attackers playing against Mount Douglas Thistles in the Greater Victoria High School Soccer League.

That's because the Thistles, with a solid defence and with Doug White guarding their nets, have answers for almost all goal-scoring tactics.

For instance, White yielded just four goals in 13 league matches last season and he's just as tough to be this time around, registering two shutouts in two starts of the currents campaign.

Thistles opened their season Tuesday with a 1-0 conquest of Spectrum and White was again in his usual excellent form Friday, ruining the day for Claremont snipers as the Thistles drubbed the Spartans 6-0.

Keith Smith and Robbie Wallace each counted twice for Mount Douglas, which charged into a 5-0 halftime lead. Other Thistle tallies came from Hugh Owen and Dennis Mamic.

Victoria High Tyees remained in first place, posting a third straight victory with 2-1 conquest of Oak Bay Bays. Dave Carlyle counted the winning goal for Vic High at 70 minutes after the clubs had reached the intermission in a 1-1 deadlock.

Antonio Nogueira, for the Tyees, and Peter Skillings, for the Bays, scored in the opening half.

In other contests, Belmont Braves bounced Stelly's Stingers 3-1, Spectrum drew 1-1 with Reynolds Roadrunners and Parkland Panthers battled Esquimalt Dockers to a 1-1 tie.

Mark Jackson counted for Spectrum in the first minute and Manuel Achadira equalized for Reynolds in the second half.

Philip Rawley's marker with about 10 minutes remaining pulled Parkland even with Esquimalt, which got a second-half goal from Derek Star.

Bill Chittick, Rob Leggatt and Alex Fraser hit the net for Belmont and Bob Schubak notched the lone Stelly's tally.

	G	W	L	T	F	A	P

Spectrum	2	0	1	1	1	2	1
Reynolds	2	0	1	1	2	4	1
Esquimalt	2	0	1	0	2	6	1
Stelly's	2	0	2	0	1	7	0

Next games: Tuesday — Spectrum at Oak Bay; Victoria High at Parkland; Belmont at Esquimalt; Stelly's at Claremont; Reynolds at Mount Douglas.

E. German pair wins skate title

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (AP) — Sabine Baesz and Tassilo Thierbach of East Germany, the world's third-ranked pairs skaters, recovered quickly from an early fall Friday night and won the pairs division of the Flaming Leaves Invitational figure skating tourney.

But the seventh-ranked U.S. pair, Caitlin and Peter Carruthers of Burlington, Mass., stole the show with a brilliant five-minute freestyle performance.

Their fiery performance lifted the Boston area brother and sister team firmly into contention for a spot on the Olympic team and well past the second-ranked U.S. team of Vicki Heasley and Robert Wagenhoffer, which had placed sixth in the world championships at Vienna in March and finished third here.

The Russian team of Zhanna Iljina and Aleksandr Vlasov dropped to fourth, with a stumble and a fall, but stayed just ahead of Mark Rowson of Comber, Ont., and Rebecca Gough of Cambridge, Ont.

In semi-final competition two well-established Hungarian skaters strengthened their hold on the dancing competition.

With half the ice dancing competition over, world silver medallists Kristina Regoeczy and Andras Sallay of Budapest remained in first place.

Lorna Wighton of Toronto and John Dowding of Oakville, Ont., held second.

If Foster wants his gondola, Harold will buy the nails

TORONTO (CP) — Harold Ballard says if Foster Hewitt wants his gondola rebuilt he'll pay for the nails.

But that's all.

The Maple Leaf Gardens president says that would be his sole contribution to Hewitt's "idiotic" desire to see the gondola rise from its ashes.

The 48-year-old gondola, from which Hewitt broadcast Gardens hockey games for years, was fed to the furnaces last month to make room for new boxes.

"We're not in the nostalgia business," Ballard said.

But one who might be is Maurice (Lefty) Reid, curator of the Hockey Hall of Fame at Exhibition Place.

Reid said Thursday that a full-sized reconstruction of the 60-foot gondola, which hung 54 feet above the Gardens ice, would be too big for the hall. But he is definitely interested in a reproduction of it, or of Hewitt's six-by-six-foot broadcast space.

A TIRE RECALL REMINDER FROM FIRESTONE

WE NEED YOUR HELP — In November 1978 Firestone Canada Inc. announced a voluntary recall of certain Steel Belted Radial "500" and TPC passenger car tires.

That recall has been going on for the past nine months. This advertisement is being published again to remind motorists who may still have "500" and TPC tires eligible for replacement that they should bring them to a Firestone store or dealer so that the recall can be completed.

We are doing everything possible to complete the recall and to get back all eligible tires. But we cannot do it alone. The only tires we can replace are the ones you bring in.

We need your help and co-operation, and we strongly urge you to bring in any eligible tires for replacement now.

Tires made in Canada, the United States or Sweden are eligible and must have not less than 2/32nds treadwear remaining.

Check your spare tire too — it might also be covered by the recall.

The following Firestone tires are being voluntarily recalled and will be replaced on a no-charge basis:

STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (5-rib)
purchased on or after September 1, 1975, and manufactured in the period from September 1, 1975 to December 31, 1976.

NEW STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (7-rib)
STEEL BELTED RADIAL TPC
purchased on or after September 1, 1975, and manufactured in the period from September 1, 1975 to May 1, 1976.

STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (5-rib)
NEW STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (7-rib)
purchased on or after September 1, 1975, and manufactured in the period from March 1, 1975 to August 31, 1975. Proof of vehicle purchase required for tires which were original equipment on a new automobile.

STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (5-rib)
NEW STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (7-rib)
WITH PROOF OF PURCHASE ONLY
purchased on or after September 1, 1975, and manufactured prior to March 1, 1975.

STEEL BELTED RADIAL TPC
WITH PROOF OF PURCHASE ONLY
purchased on or after September 1, 1975, and manufactured prior to September 1, 1975.

The following Firestone tires, although not recalled, will be replaced at 50 per cent of the regular retail selling price of the Firestone Store or dealer handling the transaction:

STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (5-rib)
NEW STEEL BELTED RADIAL 500 (7-rib)
STEEL BELTED RADIAL TPC
purchased before September 1, 1975, which are not covered by this recall.

NO CHARGE
Mounting, Balancing, Valve
Owner-users qualifying for replacement tires will receive the new generation Firestone Steel Belted Radial 721 or TPC with no-charge mounting, wheel balancing and a new valve, if required.

PROOF OF PURCHASE
You will need tire sales slip or, in the case of original equipment, car purchase invoice.

RECALL PROCEDURE
If you are the owner-user of a vehicle with any of the above-listed tires, phone your nearest Firestone Store or dealer TO MAKE AN APPOINTMENT. Firestone Stores and dealers have a complete listing of serial numbers which indicate the date of manufacture for your tires. They will, from these numbers, determine if your tires are eligible for this recall.

EXPIRY
Claims must be registered within 60 days.

TIRE CARE
Air pressure of all tires must be checked frequently and maintained as recommended by manufacturers.

A CLOSING COMMENT

As you might imagine, this recall has been an enormous undertaking. It has required — and it has received — extraordinary action on our part. We have given it priority in producing tires at our factories and in replacing tires at stores and dealers.

It has also taken the co-operation of many outside Firestone — Transport Canada, consumer agencies across the country, our loyal dealers and their employees, and of course, our customers.

Now, with your help, we can go on to finish the task. That's our pledge to you, our valued customer.

October Fitfest

Tony Casey Gang draws bead on city's creaky civil servants

By PAUL NICHOLSON

Okay, you sluggish civil servants, it's no use cowering behind your desks any longer.

Tony Casey and his October Fitfest gang are out to get you.

Out to get you moving, at least — all 7,800 of you.

Casey and company have organized a three-week exercise schedule called October Fitfest '79 designed to prod the inactive civil servant into motion.

And once that motion starts, the co-ordinator of the B.C. government employees fitness program hopes it will be perpetual.

There are about 12,000 government employees in Victoria, and if they're consistent with a statistical analysis of the rest of Canada's adults 65 per cent or 7,800 of them don't get any regular exercise.

"It's that 65 per cent we're aiming for," says Casey, although those already active will be encouraged to sign up to help their ministry's percentage participation average.

The goal for each participant is to accumulate 30 points over the three-week schedule.

To ensure the exercise is regular, Casey has worked out a system where no more than three fitfest points can be accumulated in one day or 10 in one week.

Special awards will be presented to participants and to the ministry with the best participation.

Program offers help for the 65% who need exercise

But more important than the awards are the rewards — the personal ones.

Casey feels there are a lot of people who know they need the exercise, but just lack direction, incentive, or even some company to nudge them over the barrier from inactivity to regular exercise.

"The focus is on movement," Casey says. "The more you move the more fitfest points you earn."

For example, one point is awarded for every 15 minutes of brisk walking, jogging, swimming, cycling, skipping, soccer, calisthenics, fitness classes, dancing, racquet sports, basketball, stationary cycling, skating, vigorous gardening or housework.

Two points are awarded for a round of golf (no carts) or a game of curling or bowling.

Bonus points are earned for registering for an activity class at the government Employee Fitness Program, a recreation centre of the YM-YWCA.

Bonus points are also awarded for purchasing fitness or sporting equipment such as jogging shoes, hiking boots or cross country skis; having a physical fitness assessment; climbing 10 flights of government building stairs or losing half a kilogram of weight in a week.

No more than two bonus points can be used in compiling the week's total of 10.

"Some people have suggested that it's too easy to accumulate points," Casey said. "But it's not really that easy when you consider a lot of people are doing nothing."

Casey, 27, who has been the employees' fitness co-ordinator for the occupational health services of the ministry of health for just over a year, said the October Fitfest is the first serious one of its kind in North America.

A similar program was tried in Ottawa, but became a bit of a farce when points were awarded for briefcase tossing, passing the buck and climbing ladders.

Although hoping B.C.'s effort will be fun, Casey says it has its serious side, too.

Already all 18 ministries are committed to the program, and personnel officers in each department are signing up employees.

At the end of it all on Oct. 29 there will be a wind-up banquet with awards presentations and words of athletic wisdom from the university of Victoria's singing professor Dr. Martin Collis.

Casey will then go to work following up the participants, checking first those who dropped out, and encouraging those who finished to keep active.

He will introduce new programs at the fitness centre at 539 Superior Street in the first week of November for those who want to continue exercising.

But in the meantime, keep your eyes peeled for several thousand civil servants thundering around Victoria dressed in jock-style outfits.

Who do we believe? It isn't only during election campaigns that we are fed diametrically opposed views and facts on issues which affect us all. It happens every day.

Take the nuclear power plant the Americans hope to build at Sedro Woolley just across the straits from Victoria.

Only the other night, Environment Minister Rafe Mair told TV audiences he and the other members of his government are concerned at the danger to the people of B.C. in the event of an accident at the Washington plant.

Notwithstanding, of course, that Science and Technology Minister Pat McGeer has long maintained there is no danger and that he certainly isn't concerned about the nuclear plant going ahead.

But Mair said that even if politicians and people here are concerned, it's a matter for the federal government to take up with the Americans.

"This is not a cop-out," the minister said. "It's the way we run our country."

Quite recently, we even had an indication that those in Ottawa might be a little worried about the safety of us outcasts on the west coast.

Speaking in Vancouver just over a week ago, federal environment minister John Fraser said: "Canada's concern about the danger of a nuclear disaster in Washington State devastating B.C.'s Lower Mainland should be raised at the highest level of the U.S. Government."

Guess the Honorable John just overlooked us here on the island but at least it's a start in the awakening of the awareness process.

Mair's advice was to wake up the feds some more. He suggested those concerned about the risk of a nuclear plant being built so near should write to the prime minister or to his representatives on this side of the land.

Sound advice, too, except when you recall that Mr. Clark's man on the spot, Esquimalt-Saanich MP Donald Munro, went on record last month as a strong supporter of nuclear power.

That was just after four NDP MLAs — Chris D'Arcy (Rossland-Trail), Robert Skelley (Alberni), Gordon Hanson (Victoria) and Ernie Hall (Surrey) — had taken a stand against construction of the plant and had warned that in the event of an accident at Sedro Woolley, prevailing winds would create a serious hazard in the southern part of B.C.

They were being emotional, Munro said, adding that with oil prices going up and oil reserves going down, alternative power sources must be found.

That sort of reply, said the NDPers, only betrayed Munro's ignorance and the fact he was "putting the cost of a barrel of oil ahead of the safety and health of the people of B.C."

Most of those who tell us such things can't even agree on the concept of nuclear power generally.

The NDP has been dead against it and has said it would never introduce it in B.C. Both before and since the last election, Premier Bennett, too, has said we're very fortunate here with hydro power and don't need now, nor should ever need, nuclear energy.

Of course we need nuclear energy, B.C. Hydro boss Robert Bonner has told us at every available opportunity. And now the B.C. Chamber of Commerce has backed him by saying its members are in favor of a nuclear power plant being built on Vancouver Island.

Lord help us! For He surely is the only one who really knows what we do need and whether it truly is necessary to tamper with nature in this frightening way.

A Times reader and concerned citizen came to me the other day and said until about three months ago he was ignorant about the dangers of nuclear power. But he has done a lot of reading since and now believes it's a terribly serious thing.

"What really upsets me though," he said, "is that most people don't realize just how serious it is. They don't understand that if there was a meltdown at Sedro Woolley, it would be like 1,000 Nagasaki bombs going off — and that nearly happened at Three Mile Island."

The answer is to make ourselves more aware. To seek and uncover the truths. And then, if we feel there is good reason to say we don't want it here we should make our feelings known to those who represent us . . .

. . . Before we find one day that we have lost this battle of life by default.

Two charged in cat's death

A city man and his common-law wife have been charged with breaking into the apartment of the man's brother and killing his cat.

Wilfred Harvey Hollinger, 32, and Tina Blight, 36, of 885 Ellery, appeared before a justice of peace this morning jointly charged with being unlawfully in a dwelling, mischief and killing an animal.

A police spokesman said the charges stem from a bizarre incident shortly before 1 a.m. when a man kicked in the door of an apartment at 2533 Dowler Place. The occupant, Donald Hollinger, was not at home at the time.

Police said a kitchen wall was smashed in, cigarettes ground into the carpet, and beer bottles thrown around.

When Donald Hollinger returned he discovered his cat dead on the floor.

Saanich buys Maltwood estate

A public hearing will be held in October to consider Saanich's application to rezone the Maltwood estate in Royal Oak for commercial purposes, following its purchase from the University of Victoria for $375,000.

Negotiations had been under way on the property between Mayor Mel Couvelier and UVic president Howard Petch since February.

The 7.7-acre site is zoned for institutional use.

The property had been bequeathed to UVic by John and Katherine Maltwood for use as an art museum but problems of controlling heat and humidity in the house forced the university to move the collection to a new Maltwood Gallery at University Centre.

The Maltwood estate was built in 1939 for Mr. and Mrs. Colin Forrest, who wanted to duplicate a 14th Century English hall for a restaurant. It was called the Royal Oak Inn and, later, The Thatch.

It was sold to the Maltwoods in 1945.

The Maltwood collection includes Ming ceramics, oriental carpets, rare handmade tableware, paintings and sculptures.

Ask the Times

Q. Who was Dallas Road named for? R.K.

A. Dr. Murdoch Dallas. He was educated in Scotland, coming to Victoria in 1857 as agent of the Hudson's Bay Co. In 1858 he was appointed governor of the Crown colony of British Columbia.

Elections asked for B.C's major hospital boards

Board members at large metropolitan hospitals in B.C. should be elected, not appointed, Dr. Scott Wallace said Friday.

The former Conservative party leader, deeply embroiled in the controversy at Royal Jubilee Hospital, said the performance of the board demands that the whole question of board appointments be reviewed.

"One has to ask whether the manner in which hospital boards are selected is adequate to deal with the complicated questions of running the large hospitals that offer tertiary care."

The RJH board now consists of two members appointed by Victoria council, one appointed by each of Saanich, Oak Bay, and Esquimalt, one appointed by the Royal Canadian Legion, two appointed by the provincial government, one representative of the medical staff, and four elected by the hospital society.

Terms are one year, except for those elected by the society who serve two years.

Wallace said potential board members should have to present their credentials to the public in a general election, held at the same time as municipal elections.

He said all board members should be accountable to the public.

"The Jubilee board was dragged kicking and screaming into the 20th Century. It was a tremendous battle just to get them to hold open meetings," he said.

Wallace would also like to see board members paid an honorarium, or at least expense money, for their time.

"It's obvious they are just not spending enough time on the job."

He said he cannot see that this system would make the board any more political than it is now.

"At the moment it's so bastardized, I can't see making it any worse. When the minister calls the chairman 'Terry' and says he's doing a fine job, you have to ask what's going on."

Health Minister Bob McClelland defended RJH board chairman Terry Prentice Wednesday when the medical staff voted non-confidence in him and demanded his resignation.

The change that Wallace suggests would have to come in new legislation from the provincial government.

Meanwhile, Ald. Larry Mann of Esquimalt, a Prentice defender who works for the provincial health ministry, Friday continued his attack on Jubilee doctors, saying they are to blame for rising costs.

Mann said Jubilee patients stay an average 11.2 days, compared with 8.9 days at Victoria General and a provincial average of 8.3 days.

"If we reduce the average length of stay by one day at Royal Jubilee, we have made available 50 more beds," Mann said.

However, Jubilee's acting executive director, John Clark, said the average length of stay at Jubilee and Victoria General is about the same. The figures quoted by Mann are misleading, Clark said, because the Jubilee numbers include patients in the EMI, where the average length of stay is 28 days.

"In general medical and surgical beds, our length of stay and that of the General are almost identical."

Historic flume to disappear

By PAUL MINVIELLE

The 5¼-mile wooden flume which carried water to turn turbines at the Jordan River power station for 60 years will be dismantled.

Dorothy Tupper of B.C. Hydro said the tender to dismantle the historic flume has been let to a Sooke firm.

The huge flume is a wooden tunnel-like structure atop a trestle. The inside was eight feet wide and about seven feet high.

Six million board feet of lumber were used to enlarge it in 1925, and in 1968, when reboxed, 10,000 sheets of plywood were used. The original flume was built of fir planks.

Tupper agreed the flume was indeed historic. "But it can't just be left there until it falls apart."

The whole Jordan River power project was considered staggering in scope when it was built between 1909 and 1911 by the B.C. Electric Company, the forerunner of the present B.C. Hydro and Power Authority. As many as 800 men worked on the project.

The flume carried water from Bear Creek and Diversion reservoirs to Forebay Reservoir.

From there, the water dropped 1,000 feet over about 1½ miles, through four penstocks to the powerhouse, where the electricity to power the up-and-coming city of Victoria was produced.

The whole original project was abandoned by 1971 when a new generating station, supplied by water through a new tunnel bored through rock, came onstream.

The original power plant at Jordan River had one generator producing 5,500 horsepower. By 1928, when the fourth generator was operational, total output from the site was 41,750 horsepower. Total cost was $5,000,000.

By comparison, the replacement project completed 60 years later cost $30,000,000.

History student wins

A University of Victoria graduate student has won a $6,000 open graduate scholarship to Simon Fraser University, one of 10 such awards.

Margaret Whitehead, 874 Hyacinth, is studying for a doctorate in history.

The other nine open scholarships were awarded to three SFU graduates and graduate students from the universities of Vienna, Mexico, Lancaster, Washington, Waterloo (Ont.), and Dalhousie (N.S.).

Four students shared the prestigious Memorial Graduate Scholarship, valued at $8,000.

Lefthand lib is on the way

By LESLIE ATWATER

Sooner or later, it had to happen. Toronto's southpaws plan a protest march through certain downtown streets of that right-handed city. Naturally, as the right-thinking world views these matters, they will be marching out of step.

It's hell to be a lefthanded person in a righthanded world. I know. I happen to be one of the sinisters — from the Latin "sinistra' meaning left - and pay for it at every turn and corner.

Let me give you an example.

A while ago, I coveted a pair of office shears. They were made in Finland to a smart, modern design, and their precisely fitted blades cut to perfection. But it occured to me as I snipped at a sample piece of paper while a bored clerk looked on, that something was wrong with the handles. They felt awkward: They didn't fit my fingers.

Then it dawned on me. The lefthanded jinx had struck again. These were righthanded scissors.

I told the clerk my plight.

"Oh," she said flatly. then, with a signal lack of interest, "Well, I believe they do make a lefthanded model."

So I ordered the lefthanded model. From Finland, naturally. That was weeks ago. I'm still waiting for them to arrive.

There was a time when I entertained bitter thoughts about the prunes-and-prisms schoolma'rm who switched my writing from lefthanded to right with many a corrective lick on the knuckles from her heavy ruler. But now, when watching a typical leftie go through the painful convolutions necessary to perform the act of writing, I render grudging thanks to Miss Dove.

Of course, there is a price to pay for this arbitrary switching over. It encourages a state of mental confusion, and is no doubt responsible for the switched lefthander's tendency to back into life's various situations.

With this in mind, I have tried diligently to become ambidextrous, and to some small extent, have succeeded. I play golf with righthanded clubs . . . and confess to a hook so villainous that it must be seen to be believed.

But I have never learned to eat righthanded, a fact that has sabotaged many a gathering around a dining-table.

"You'll sit there," says my hostess, and meekly I take my place.

My neighbor on the left is righthanded. Within seconds, our soup-spoon elbows have collided, and I'm busily muttering apologies while mopping with my napkin.

Experienced hostesses try to pre-sort the sheep from the goats, the righthanded from the left. At any rectangular table, I can count on being the last-in-line, largely excluded from the conversation, and with knees fitted around a corner leg.

I mentioned those shears. It's the same where many other tools are concerned. Put a wrench in my hand, and I will unfailingly turn a nut from merely stubborn to immovable by twisting it in the wrong direction.

And if I don't police myself sternly, I'm overtaken by an urge to extend my left hand for a handshake.

These are a few of the difficulties that confront a lefthanded sojourner. He must constantly swim against the current.

Still, there are a few slender compensations.

As a trout fisherman, I find that I can hook a lefthanded cast into come brushy pocket that the right-handed angler can't reach without becoming well and truly snagged.

Also, when Win and I foregather with our children, the lefties come into their own.

Ron is a southpaw.

So is Susan.

We three can sit companionably at the same table without interfering with each other. Not so, my dear one. As odd girl out, she has to pick her position with care.

Last time we dined together — three left hands moving in unison, — Win regarded us bleakly with fork suspended in her right hand.

"You make me feel so lonely!" she said.

Take heart, someone's worse

LONDON (UPI) — All of you out there who never have done things well, take heart. Someone has done them worse.

And not only done them worse, but had them catalogued in the Book of Heroic Failures, a recent publication by Stephen Pile that describes with great enthusiasm the most glowing failures of this century.

There is, for example, the least successful safety film, one made by British Aircraft Corporation in 1976 on the dangers of not wearing protective goggles in factory work.

Unfortunately it was so gory one welder fell off his chair in fright and had to have seven stitches in his head and another 13 persons fainted and had to be helped out.

Then there was the least convenient post box. It was erected, due to a series of amazing engineering mishaps, nine feet above the ground in Ballymacra, Ireland. Amazingly, during the three weeks it remained in this position, the mail managed to get through.

"I am told," said the postmaster, "someone provided a step ladder. The mind boggles."

Ireland also won the honors with the least successful equal pay advertisement in which the Dublin government advertised for an equal pay enforcement officer and listed different salary scales for men and women.

The least accurately labelled museum exhibit turned out to be an object exhibited in 1971 in County Durham as a Roman sesterius coin, minted between A.D. 135 and A.D. 138. A nine-year-old museum goer pointed out it really was a plastic token given away by a soft drink firm.

Television viewers would be interested in the least successful TV program, presented on French television Aug 14, 1978. An opinion poll showed not a single viewer watched the show, an extensive interview with an Armenian woman on her 40th birthday ranging over the way she met her husband, her illnesses and the joy of living.

The least successful Alcoholics Anonymous meeting was held in Belfast in 1974 and ended in a cloakroom brawl after $847 had been spent at the bar.

The worst homing pigeon, released in England in June 1953, was expected to reach base that evening. It was returned by mail, dead, in a cardboard box 11 years later from Brazil.

"We had given it up for lost," said the owner.

your health

By Dr. L. L. COLEMAN

I'm a young woman, and belong to a club. The "girls" are always complaining about their doctors. I recently had an awful experience. I gave birth to a stillborn child. It would have been our first. My husband and I were overwhelmed by distress. If it weren't for my doctor, we could not have gotten through this difficult time. I really believe that there are a lot of doctors like mine who are not given credit for their kindness and understanding. My doctor is a woman of dedication and compassion. I just want to shout to the world my gratitude.

Mrs. S. L.

Dear Mrs. L.:

It is particularly touching that, after such acute grief, you should express your reaction to someone who offered you solace and comfort. I am sure that your doctor allowed you to express the intensity of your sorrow and encouraged you to outline a pattern of living which will eventually bring you compensating joy.

At first, women who have had such an unhappy occurance cannot believe that their life will once again find the fulfillment that they had anticipated.

Yet, it does happen. The original anguish is supplanted by hope when couples have the emotional support and guidance of family, friends and doctors.

I share with you your enthusiasm about doctors. My own experience in the practice of medicine has been one of enormous faith in the dedication of most doctors to their patients.

Dear Doctor:

Even with the slightest injuries, I get black-and-blue marks all over my arms and my legs. Otherwise I am in excellent health. Could there be something wrong with my blood?

Miss L. P.

Dear Miss P.:

Some people have especially delicate blood vessels. The walls of these vessels break easily, even with the slightest pressure or injury. When this happens, blood oozes out of the ruptured blood vessel and causes the discoloration under the skin. These black-and-blue marks are known as "ecchymoses." Many normal, healthy people like yourself have this problem.

It has been known to occur more frequently in fair-haired people with translucent, delicate skin. Often this occurs in other members of the family as well.

Although your problem does not seem to be of any significance, you would have a great deal of extra assurance if you were to have a complete bloody study, just to be sure that you are not overlooking any underlying and readily rectifiable condition.

Dear Abby:

I've read many letters in your column from people who don't know what to do about uninvited guests. We have a nice little house at the beach which inspired the following:

June is past, so is July,
August is ended -- likewise I.
The pattering feet of summer and sun
Are over, complete, exhausted, done!
I've fed the young as well as the old,
I've cooled the warm, I've warmed the cold,
The wounded and weeping I have consoled,
The tender and touchy I have cajoled.
I have steeled the scared, I have scared the bold,
I have bit my tongue till it was controlled.
I've broiled the steak, I have casseroled
And the grocer thinks I am made of gold.
(The other bills I have pigeon-holed.)
And frankly, friends, I am ready to fold!
Next time I live I'll make the most
Of being the guest and not the host.

Tired

Dear Abby:

I am married to a man who has never cared much for the company of men, but he sure likes the ladies! Whenever we are with a group of friends or relatives and the men congregate in one room and the women in another, you can always find Herman with the women.

He also has a cute way of turning the conversation to the subject of sex, or something risque. He's 55 and not going through any kind of change. He's always been this way.

My women friends are always telling me how "lucky" I am to have such an entertaining husband. Believe me, he's not all that entertaining when he's alone with me. (All talk, no action, if you get my drift.)

If you've ever heard of behavior like this before, I wish you'd explain it.

Herman's Wife

Dear Wife:

Herman is a classic example of a man whose masculine ego needs constant stroking, so he seeks out social situations where he's sure to have a receptive audience and no competition.

As for his habit of talking about sex so much, those who can, do, and those who can't, talk about it.

Dear Abby:

I am a 17-year-old boy. My sister who is 15 is adopted, so we are not blood relatives, right?

We have always been very close, but now our relationship seems to be headed in another direction. We have done a lot of wrestling, touching and fondling, but so far nothing more.

We have talked about this and have come to the conclusion that because we are technically sister and brother, we should not have any physical feelings for each other. Yet we can't help how we feel.

What is morally right in this case? We are not blood relatives, so maybe if we let our feelings go, we could marry each other some day.

What do you think?

Brotherly Love

Dear Brotherly:

Although you aren't blood relatives, you are legally brother and sister. That could create a problem should you want to marry later on.

Cool the wrestling, touching and fondling. Physical contact could lead to a physical relationship which would be morally wrong at your ages. You both need to talk to a trusted adult about your feelings. I would hope you could discuss this with your parents. If not, then a clergyman, physician or counsellor. You ask some intelligent questions and deserve some honest answers.

Setter gets set in ways

Wonderful World of Animals

By Dr. Frank Miller

Dear Dr. Miller:

Our English setter moved from her bed and started sleeping in mine. She's also stopped eating out of a dog food bowl, but she will eat off my plate. Does she think she's becoming a person?

—M.C.

Dear M.C.:

No. but I think she's becoming spoiled. And remember it's a lot easier to spoil your setter than it is to "unspoil" her, should you ever decide that you want your bed and/or plate to yourself.

Dear Dr. Miller:

Any time I have goldfish, they seem to get sick and die. I have a regular goldfish bowl that is always clean and kept well. The water is about the right temperature. I don't know why the goldfish do this. Is there a sickness in the fishbowl? —J.K.

Dear J.K.:

If: (a) Your goldfish bowl is clean but free of soap, detergents. or other chemicals, (b) the water is fresh and not polluted with chlorine or old fish food, (c) the food is nutritious and fed in proper amounts and, (d) if the fish are healthy to start with, they should make it if they have enough room. An old fishbowl shouldn't be more than half-full of water. This provides for the maximum air (oxygen) exchange at the water's surface. You indicate. though, that you keep more than one goldfish. Almost all goldfish bowls simply aren't big enough to accommodate more than one goldfish adequately, and a snail one at that. It could be your main problem them is not a contaminated bowl, but the fact that yoy have a goldfish bowl at all. Goldfish, as well as other fish, do better in a straight-sided aquarium, and the more water per fish, the better.

Dear Dr. Miller:

My cat scratched everything, including me. So I had him declawed. I was sorry right afterward because his feet were pretty sore, but he's all right now. Now I have a new problem. He bites everything, including me. Don't worry, I'm not going to have his teeth taken out, but I'm just wondering if he would have started to bite anyway or if this is because I had him declawed.

—M.R.

Dear M.R.:

Declawing deprives a cat of some defenses and a means of expression. The biting in this case is undoubtedly substitute behavior. Being deprived of claws will accentuate the use of teeth in many cats.

Dear Dr. Miller:

We're planning big economies in our heating bill this winter. I'm sure we're not the only ones with a parakeet wondering what to do about this. It is our understanding that parakeets are particularly sensitive to cold, so how is Frank N. Stein, our bird, going to cope?

Dear D.E.:

Parakeets don't come from colder climes, true. Still, Stein could cope with cool weather remarkably well if he's in good health to begin with, acclimated to weather changes gradually and protected from drafts. The bird cage, then, should be in an area which is comparatively draft-free. Check this by holding a lit candle near the sides of the bird's cage at various times of the day. If there are any drafts and a location change isn't possible, then it's best to use a clear plastic covering on three sides and top of the cage, leaving only the front completely open. At night, additional complete covering, but with material that allows some air flow, would be advisable.

Remember zip code

NEW YORK (AP) — Got any bright ideas for using zippers?

New York City wants to hear from you.

The city is sponsoring a "Zipp-in" design contest in an effort to stimulate the lagging zipper industry here.

Entries must be mounted on boards with a written description on the back and must be submitted to the city's Office of Economic Development by Nov. 9.

They will be judged by a panel composed of leaders in the fashion, design and technical industries. Winners will receive cash prizes.

More than 1,000 tots have had hair clipped, shampooed, styled and blown dry there at $10.50 a shot. Many salons won't do children's hair because of the fuss, of crying and disturbing other clients, said Scharringhausen.

Egg image cracks fixed

OTTAWA (UPC) — The massive publicity campaign, "Get Cracking" and rising beef prices have been credited with increasing Canadian consumption of eggs by five to eight percent since the first of the year.

Canadians seem to be ignoring fears of high cholesterol and there has been a "remarkable upsurge" in egg consumption, Phil Eldridge, the Alberta representative on the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency's board of directors said Thursday.

The federal agency's findings contradict Statistics Canada reports which have consistently shown a decline in egg consumption.

"Public concern over cholesterol in eggs has diminished significantly because of more recent medical research which has challenged the popular belief that cholesterol in the diet contributes to heart disease."

The federal health and welfare department has officially said cholesterol poses no rish for "normal, healthy people who do not suffer from elevated blood cholesterol levels."

Following initial reports that made the egg — combined with bacon — part of the "killer breakfast" theory, egg producers protested that research was incomplete and in fact unfairly maligned their product.

WHEELS

by Mike Lamm

Dear Mike:
When I first try to start my 1973 Olds Delta 88 after letting it "rest" a few days, the engine barely turns over. It sounds like a weak battery. But then if I play with the key and jiggle it a few times, the starter picks up speed and the engine finally starts. One mechanic thought it was the starter, and another replaced the solenoid, but no one seems to know what's really wrong.

Weird Starter

Dear Weird:
Check your battery connections and all starter-system wiring connections to be sure they're tight and clean. Be sure to check the key tumbler, too, because oftentimes the key contacts become worn.

Dear Mike:
The top of the instrument panel in my 1977 Plymouth Arrow has cracked — the hard plastic surface. The local dealer and two bodyshops have told me that the only remedy is to replace the entire panel housing. But all three add that the replacement panel will also crack in time because I, like so many other drivers, have to leave my car out in the hot sun all day each summer. Is there any way that such instrument-panel tops can be economically and satifactorily repaired?

Cracked

Dear Cracked:
You might try gluing a covering layer over the surface of your cracked panel. Be sure to use a material with a dark matte finish — like a vinyl velour or suede. Light-colored, shiny surfaces tend to reflect in the windshield. And if you decide to replace your instrument-panel housing, you might prevent its future cracking by simply laying (not gluing) a dark matte cover over it.

Dear Mike:
Do tires need to be rebalanced at specific intervals — like when they're rotated? I bought a set of new steel-belted radials 12,000 miles ago and plan to have them switched front to rear before winter. Should I also have them rebalanced at the same time?

Curious

Dear Curious:
It's a good idea to rebalance tires when you rotate them.

Arctic salvage his specialty

By AB KENT

The loss of $300,000 worth of scientific equipment in the Arctic may not be permanent as it seems, a Victoria oceanographer said Thursday.

"Where there's hope, there's me," said Dick Herlinveaux, of the Institute of Ocean Sciences, who had organized an exercise to recover several strings of current meters and supporting gear suspended under the ice by oceanographers more than 18 months ago.

The field work to recover the instruments and recorded data was to have taken place during the summer using Pisces submersibles from an armed forces ship. But the expedition was plagued with ship problems, forcing the effort to be abandoned.

Ocean surges and ice are the main hazards faced by oceanographers surveying the Arctic, reducing the chances of getting back instruments and information.

"There's hope," said Herlinveaux, an Arctic researcher whose experience goes back 30 years. "I've picked up buoys that have broken loose, just by chance."

He is planning another recovery expedition in co-operation with the armed forces, who were to have used this year's voyage as a training exercise.

A dozen meters were placed at the eastern end of Lancaster Sound and about six in the area of Barrow Strait, together with buoys, tackle and release mechanisms. Ice conditions had prevented recovery the previous season.

Herlinveaux said the instruments were deployed to provide scientists with information about winter conditions in the passage which may play an important role in supply and crude oil transport for the petroleum industry, with defence implications.

The work is part of similar research being undertaken by Petrocan and independent oil companies, from which results are shared.

If there is no recovery, the loss will make a costly gap in the continuous oceanographic record for that period of time and scientists may have to rely on information gathered by the oil companies to fill part of the gap.

Meanwhile, the sea is taking its toll of the gear, designed for only relatively brief periods of submersion. Shackles which hold the strings of instruments together have been found to corrode quickly in Arctic conditions, and the waterproof housings of the meters themselves may leak and begin to disintegrate.

Sometimes the ice breaks strings apart, crushing buoys and allowing instruments to sink to the ocean floor, or to break loose from moorings and be carried vast distances.

Herlinveaux said he had just had word from Clyde Inlet, on the northeastern coast of Baffin Island, that Eskimos had found some instruments which "may be some of mine."

He was awaiting word from Petrocan which has also been surveying Lancaster Sound area.

An American oil company, Norlands, lost a number of instrument strings two years ago and the Clyde find may be theirs, Herlinveaux said.

Batteries which power miniature tape recorders usually last no more than a year but have been known to go on working longer, providing scientists with a bonus of information until the recorders run out of tape.

Even when flooded, however, the instruments may yield useable tapes from which data can be deciphered.

Herlinveaux said Arctic surges are largely a mystery. They are unpredictable, sudden wellings of water which are probably of meteorological origin in the oceans.

When they diffuse into the Arctic Archipelago they are intensified by the narrow passages, channels and inlets and under the sea ice they may thrust instruments destructively against the underside of the ice.

Second LRB hearing

The Labor Relations Board will have to hold at least one more hearing before determining whether 23 civilian employees of the Saanich police department can break away from the Canadian Union of Public Employees and join the police association.

The board held a hearing in Victoria but a date for another meeting has yet to be set.

The civilian employees, members of CUPE Local 374, petitioned last spring to join the police association feeling the association was more in tune with their problems.

The association accepted the members in May but CUPE protested and asked the LRB for a hearing.

SFU team to examine student learning habits

How students learn will be the subject of a three-year study being undertaken by a Simon Fraser University team of researchers.

The project has received $100,000 funding from the U.S. National Institute of Education.

Educational psychologists Dr. Ronald W. Marx and Dr. Phillip H. Winne will also use the opportunity to discover how students decide what to learn from any material presented to them.

Marx and Winne, members of the SFU faculty of education, have already reached some conclusions about the inconsistency of learning in classrooms.

"If a teacher says to a class 'This is important,' it is almost certain the students will somehow emphasize that material," said Marx.

Added Winne: "But despite the fact they have been warned it is significant, despite the fact they have made notes on it or marked it in some special way as important, and despite the fact they themselves can tell you it will likely be on an exam, some students will either fail to learn it or they will learn it either incorrectly or incompletely."

The two researchers hope to find out why this happens and to discover a method that will overcome the problem.

B.C.'s name game a truly tangled tale

CORK, Ireland (CP) — If Queen Victoria's wishes had prevailed, Vancouver residents would be cheering for the N.C. Lions.

The queen originally dubbed the Pacific colony New Caledonia. And the British government of the day also heard arguments in favor of New Cornwall, New Hanover, New Georgia, or just plain Pacifica.

The story of how British Columbia got its name is told by Ged Martin, a professor of modern history at University College, Cork, in a recent issue of the British historical journal Albion.

It's a tangled tale, involving not only the queen, but also Prince Albert, Liberal party leader William Gladstone, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton and a supporting cast of backbenchers, ministers and colonial officials.

With the help of correspondence from the Royal Archives, Martin traces the original decision by Victoria to call the colony New Caledonia and the switch a month later to British Columbia.

The story begins on June 24, 1858, when Lytton, the British colonial secretary, wrote to the queen advising her that the discovery of gold in the Fraser River Valley made it necessary to set up a new colony.

"It is desirable that the name of the new colony be inserted in the bill," wrote the queen.

Martin observes that "since the measure was to be introduced within a week, the procedure was slapdash."

Lytton told the queen explorers had called the proposed colony New Caledonia, but he cautioned that the name was already used to designate the chief island in the New Hebrides group in the South Pacific and the French had proposed a colony there.

He suggested the names New Cornwall and New Hanover as well, but the queen settled on New Caledonia and the name was included in the bill presented to Parliament.

During second reading, some MPs began to question the choice of a name that could be easily confused with a French colony, or even another colony in the Canadas.

Robert Lowe, for one, said New Caledonia meant pretty much the same as Nova Scotia and urged Lytton to "hit upon some other name that was not quite so used up."

Opposition to the choice also arose when it was suggested that the selection could give rise to a catch question in civil service examinations on the location of New Caledonia.

By the time the bill reached committee July 12, there were suggestions to change the name to Pacifica or New Albion, or even an anglicized version of an Indian name.

A week later, Gladstone attacked the arbitrary nature of government proposed for the new colony.

Lytton was commited to passage of the bill but decided it might help smooth the way if the contentious name were changed.

As a result, the queen was asked if she would agree to select a less confusing name. Her reply came the following day.

It pointed out that although New Hanover, New Cornwall and New Georgia all appeared on maps of the region, the only name consistently given the territory was Columbia. Hence the suggestion British Columbia.

Martin says the letter "is almost certainly an example of Albert's careful brain."

It was then decided to publicize the fact that the new name was the personal choice of Queen Victoria, a ploy sure to rid the proposal of any opposition.

On Aug. 2, the legislation was given royal assent after passage by the House of Lords and the new colony became known as British Columbia. However, there was still some confusion among the public, as witness a newspaper reference to "New Columbia" a few weeks later.

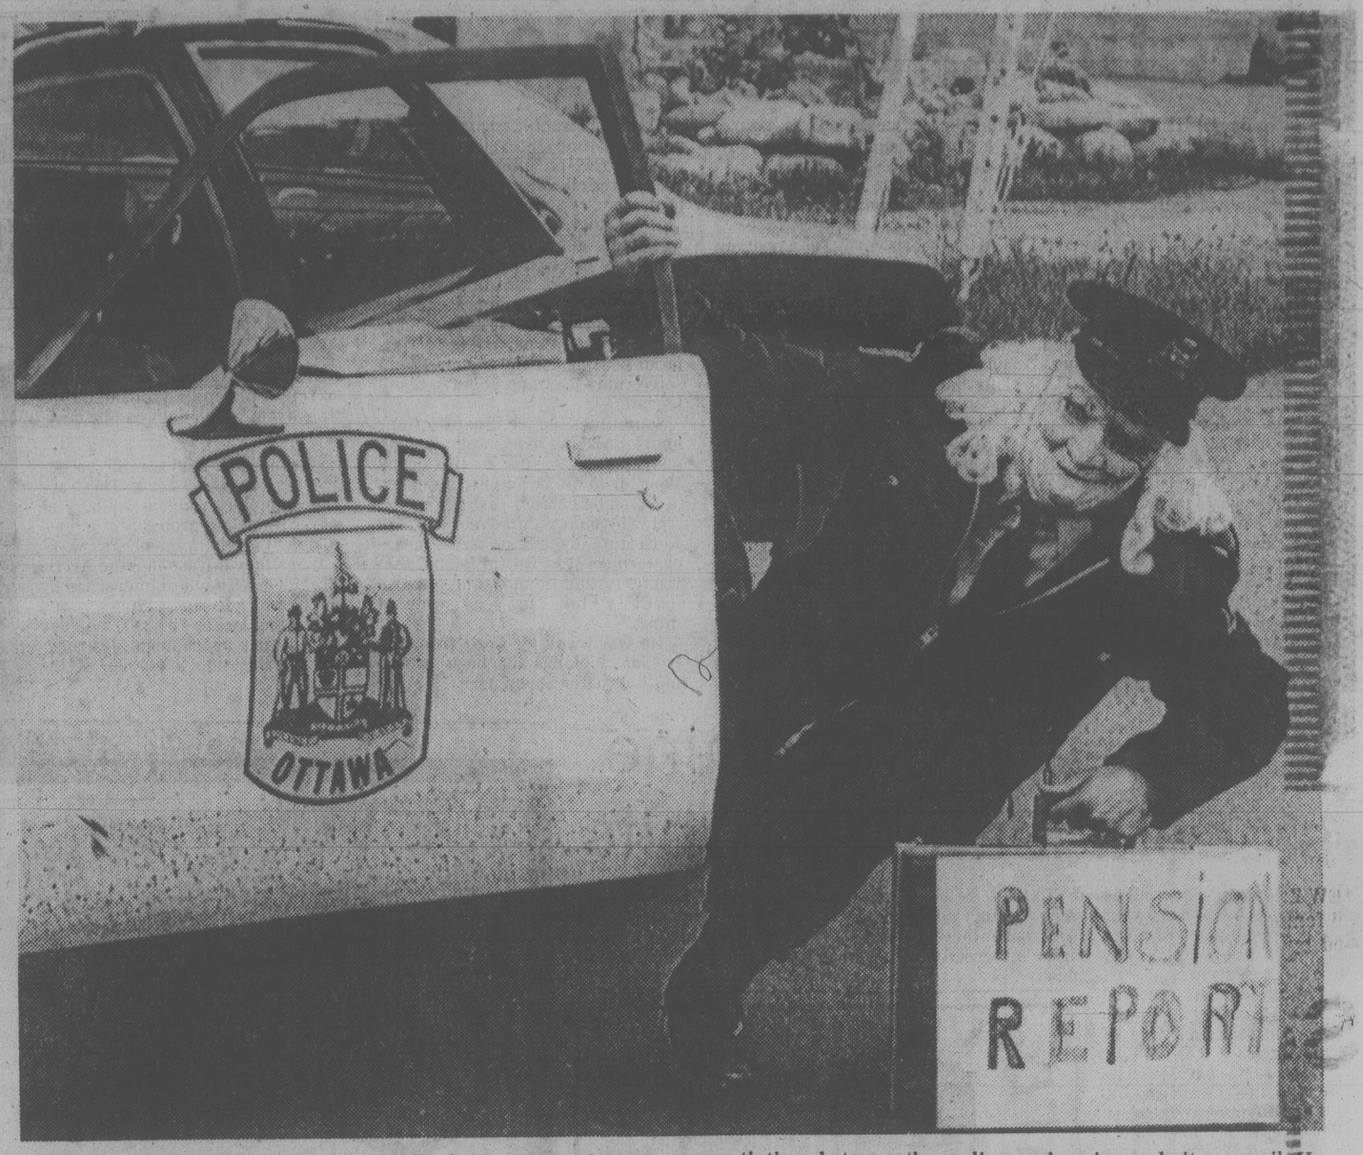
A year after, another problem arose. The lieutenant-governor, Col. Richard Moody, had laid out the site of a mainland capital and dubbed it Queensborough.

Lytton reacted violently to the suggestion, calling it "prosaic and the quintessence of vulgarity."

The colonial secretary then suggested three alternatives to the queen — Regina, Augusta and New Westminster. The Queen decided on the last one and hence the B.C. city was named.

Martin concludes that the whole episode sheds little light on the role of the monarchy in the 18th century, "but it does illustrate the careless and hasty manner in which the new Pacific colony was created."

The British-born professor has a keen interest in Canadian history and has been attempting to set up a Canadian studies program in the Southern Irish university where he teaches.



WHO WAS THAT MASKED MAN? Actually, he's an angry Ottawa policeman who chose a unique way to protest the current contract negotiations between the policemen's union and city council. He and fellow officers have accused the city of 'poor bargaining'.

Mirabel a $1B white elephant?

TORONTO (CP) — Mirabel airport near Montreal has cost Canadian taxpayers more than $1 billion, author Walter Stewart says in a book published Friday.

In Paper Juggernaut — Big Government Gone Mad, Stewart says the federal government has owned up to $554 million in capital costs and has conceded that the airport is losing money at the rate of about $1 million a week.

However, he says a report prepared for the treasury board in June, 1978, and never released, concludes the total cost of the airport's first phase, two runways and one terminal, may range between $1.1 million and $1.4 million.

That price does not include phases 2 and 3, with their six runways and six terminals.

The detailed document, Study of Procedures in Cost Effectiveness, Mirabel Airport, concludes that the forecasts of air traffic on which the decision to build the airport was based were wildly optimistic, and that "value has not been received for money expended."

"Economy was ignored."

In addition, despite claims of Transport Canada that Mirabel would be self-sustaining financially, the report says this objective is "definitely not achieved and unlikely for many years."

Stewart says the report also suggests Mirabel, at Ste.-Scholastique, Que., 55 kilometres north of Montreal, may have not been necessary.

"Failure to properly evaluate an expanded Dorval (the Montreal-area's other international airport) as an alternative was crucial," the report says.

"Other hidden documents tell an astonishing story about Mirabel," says Stewart.

"They suggest, in brief, that there was probably no need ever to build a second airport for Montreal, that if such an airport were needed, Ste.-Scholastique was the wrong place to put it, and that even if the airport were needed and properly sited, enormous sums were wasted by the sloppiness, indecision and lack of proper control by responsible officials."

FP goes it alone

TORONTO (CP) — FP Publications Ltd. of Toronto plans to pursue opportunities in the data-base publishing videotext industry on its own through the InfoGlobe division of The Globe and Mail, says Globe publisher Roy Megarry.

He said discussions on a joint project with Southam Inc. and Torstar Corp., both of Toronto, have ended.

InfoGlobe provides on-line computer access to all information carried by The Globe and Mail and Report on Business over the last two years.

Crippled DC-9s force Air Canada flight cuts

MONTREAL (CP) — Air Canada plans only five round trips between Ottawa and Toronto today instead of the normal 10 as the airline attempts to come to grips with faults in some of its DC-9 class 32 jets.

Airline spokesman Raymond Guerin, in an interview late Friday, described the move as a "consolidation."

"When there is lots of service," he explained, "it's easier to consolidate."

There will also be some changes on three scheduled round trips today on the Montreal-Toronto Rapidair run. Instead of the DC-9s which were originally supposed to make the trip, the airline has substituted Boeing 727s.

The airline cleared its "healthy" DC-9s Friday to fly at top altitudes after keeping them to a maximum ceiling of 25,000 feet for three days.

The move was made while Air Canada conducted a series of intense inspections of its 43-plane DC-9 class 32 fleet.

One plane, in a potentially-dangerous incident Monday, dropped its three-metre long tail cone into the Atlantic Ocean but was able to land safely at Boston airport.

Another eight aircraft were discovered to have cracks in their rear structures but six of them were back in service Friday after repairs. In two of the planes the airline discovered cracks it described as serious and similar to those which led to the Boston incident.

A.D. Bone, vice-president in charge of maintenance at Air Canada, had told reporters: "We are satisfied there are no planes flying with cracks in the rear bulkhead area."

The Boston plane had an undetected crack which showed up on x-rays four months ago.

It spread far enough to make the bulkhead door give way, causing an explosive decompression in the cabin. The force of the escaping air blew out the tail cone which dropped into the ocean along with a drink trolley and baggage.

It will take the airline about two more weeks to complete its full x-ray inspection of the bulkhead into which the rear emergency door fits on all DC-9 class 32 jets.

The airline also announced Friday it will proceed with a bulkhead strengthening modification of the aircraft recommended by the manufacturer, McDonnell Douglas.

A spokesman explained the manufacturer is considering ways to improve the modification.

The modifications to the airline's 43 aircraft in this series will begin Sunday and it is estimated that it will take about two and a half days to complete each plane.

Air Canada also announced it will reserve two aisle passenger seats at the rear of the plane for flight attendants during take-off and landing. The attendants had expressed concern about sitting on seats attached to the rear bulkhead.

In Toronto, a spokesman for the flight attendants' association said Transport Canada made the decision to have the attendants occupy two passenger seats as a result of complaints by the 5,000-member Canadian Airline Flight Attendants' Association.

NDP chief hits at Clark record

TORONTO (CP) — Joe Clark promises changes but delivers mostly broken promises, federal New Democratic Party leader Ed Broadbent said Friday.

Speaking to a partisan audience at a Toronto Labor Representative Association luncheon, Broadbent said the four-month-old Clark government hasn't lived up to expectations.

He told the local labor leaders that the Liberals were voted out of office because of financial mismanagment and rejection of their cynical approach to government.

"But there have been no changes, no breath of fresh air — just different faces masking the same old cynicism and policies."

Broadbent attacked the Progressive Conservatives for promising to reduce unemployment and yet not introducing a single job creation program since taking power May 22.

Clark promised tax justice with tax cuts for Canadians of middle and low income, Broadbent said, but Clark's solution is the mortagage interest deductibility scheme which favors the more affluent.

"Of Canada's nine million families just short of 50 per cent are renters."

Problems blamed on Bryce

SASKATOON (CP) — Transport Minister Don Mazankowski said Friday Bryce Mackasey was not fired as chairman of Air Canada because he was a Liberal — "The decision wasn't based on partisan politics."

When one of the reporters to whom he made the statement asked if that means Mackasey was fired because he was responsible for problems in Air Canada, Mazankowski grinned and replied: "that's a possibility."

He would not discuss details of any settlement that Mackasey may get.

X-ray errors hit

LLOYDMINSTER, Sask. (CP) — Federal Transport Minister Don Mazankowski said Friday he wants a complete report on the breakdown in safety inspection which resulted in the loss of a tail cone by an Air Canada DC-9 a few days ago.

"The reading of the x-rays is where the breakdown occurred," Mazankowski said at a news conference.

Mazankowski said Canadian authorities are cooperating closely with the U.S. Federal Aviation Authority to ensure the safety inspection mechanism is "beefed up."

He said he flew on a DC-9 Thursday and has faith in the aircraft and inspection process.

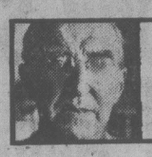
NEW ZOO ARRIVAL in Los Angeles, is a two-week-old female mountain tapir, which is seen being muzzled by its proud mother. Zoo director Dr. Warren Thomas said the youngster looked like "a furry brown and white watermelon". Mountain tapirs, related to the horse and rhinoceros, are natives of the Andes.

So you want fruit trees: Better read this first



GARDENING
Jack Beastall

You already know all the good reasons for planting fruit trees in your garden. The matter has been thoroughly discussed with the family. The kinds of fruits you would like to grow have been decided and the planting is to be done this fall.

The reason you called me was to know if one variety is any better than another, and to make sure that planting this fall is an acceptable practice.

You told me you wanted an apple, a pear, a peach, a plum and a cherry. The peach was to go against the house wall, the other four trees against the fences with table and chairs under them for a shady pace to sit in summer.

After a few minutes conversation I understood your basic plan, but felt that several points had not occurred to you, points requiring serious consideration before you go too far.

One apple tree is good, but two apples, one early for immediate use and one late variety for keeping over Christmas, are much better, and if you want good crops be sure to buy two trees, not two varieties on one tree.

The peach tree against the wall is fine providing the roots are set at least three feet out from the foundation, not in a narrow space between the foundation and a wall. The foundation must be waterproofed because a peach needs quantities of water at the roots to produce good fruit.

The curl disease of peach leaves is something we cannot avoid in our damp and chilly coastal springs. If you are going to try fighting it by spraying in August and December you will have to spray the back of the limbs against the wall as well as the front. You might do better to set it in the open where spraying is easier and can be properly done all over.

One each of pear, cherry and plum won't work. These trees must have two different but compatible varieties in close proximity to produce a reasonable crop. This means six trees instead of three. Have you room in the garden for eight trees, or nine if you have two apples?

The minimum planting distance for semi-dwarf fruit trees is 25 feet in all directions. This distance is considered essential for sufficient light and air to reach each tree for good cropping and for limiting fungus deseases.

Your idea of planting along the fence lines is not good. Fruit trees should be planted a minimum of 15 feet from all property lines so that pruning, spraying and picking can be done from your own property. This rule avoids future arguments as to your neighbor's rights to cut off roots, branches, or to pick fruit on those parts of the trees which invade their property.

The idea of chairs and tables under the trees presupposes a beautiful stretch of grass. Ideal if you can find a solution to one problem.

Fruit trees are fertilized once only, in late February. Any fertilizer reaching the roots later in the season has an adverse effect on the keeping qualities of the fruits, and encourages rank growth the next season and less fruit.

Grass must receive three applications of a complete grass fertilizer and three applications of sulphate of ammonia between the first of April and Labor Day, plus far more water than required by fruit trees. You can have good fruit and no grass near, or good grass and a veritable forest of trees with little fruit.

Now a look at the trees themselves. Those on semi-dwarfing root stocks (apples and pears) go to a height of around 15 feet with a spread of 20 feet when fully grown.

Cherries produce fruit on new wood, not fruit spurs, and cannot be severely pruned without damaging the trees. They go higher each year and the fruit is soon beyond reach. Birds peck the fruits before they are ripe to obtain thirst quenching juices.

Plums bear on fruiting spurs which last about 5 years. New wood is encouraged each year to supply replacement spurs. Severe pruning to limit height causes bark splitting and the eventual death of the tree. When a dead plum tree is cut down sucker growths appear in abundance from the underground roots. Only root removal will remedy the trouble.

During winter, apples will stand a few days of surface water providing it drains quickly when the rain stops. Pear roots are more easily damaged and will not tolerate surface water or too high an underground water table.

All stone fruits need well drained soil, preferably sloping ground for perfect winter drainage, and they require dressings of lime to keep them in good condition.

What will be the effect of fruit trees on plants already growing in the garden?

Flowering plants, shrubs, certain grasses and conifers, will not do well in shade cast by fruit trees, nor in a soil that is laced with fruit tree roots. Acid-loving plants will not thrive near soil limed for stone fruits. No fertilizer can be given nearby plants, nor heavy watering, because of damage to fruits and excessive growth on the trees.

As to varieties, if you are going to sacrifice a mixed garden for a fruit orchard, pass up the well known commercial varieties and grow those of highest quality, the delicious varieties too delicate for shipping therefore never seen in the market.

These varieties are available from local nurseries which specialize only in fruit trees. Because home gardeners do not know the names of these varieties the demand in not great and stocks are always limited. They are only dug to order, so place your order immediately.

In the meantime, prepare the planting holes while the soil is dry and workable, also six-foot stakes, one or more for each tree, the number required depending on the exposure of the garden to wind. Sufficient ties will be needed, made from soft wire threaded through 10-inch lengths of old garden hose. The stakes are set in the holes before planting.

With everything ready, the holes dug and the stakes in place, planting will be an easy and pleasurable job.

The final decision on whether it would be feasible to grow fruit trees in your garden, the number of kinds of fruits to include, and the number of trees the property can reasonably hold, must be yours.

Your ability to study and master the art of fruit tree pruning is another fact which will determine whether or not you can succeed with fruit trees.

Careful consideration of the points mentioned here should help you make a wise decision, and prevent making the mistakes many local gardeners have made; also the problems they are now trying to solve.

Week's Work

Wallflowers and other biennials, transplanted in early July, need putting into flowering positions now while soil is warm enough to re-establish quickly.

Daffodils for winter bloom indoors — pot the top size of early varieties. Root in slightly dampened cool soil outdoors. Cover pots with loose soil for eight weeks; or in unheated crawl space.

Gather filberts from branches when rich brown. Look for others among leaves on ground. They become mouldy if left a few hours. Dry on shallow trays in sun before storage for winter.

Beets, turnips, carrots that are full size can be lifted for storage in cool place in dry sand to exclude air. Use smaller sizes freely while at best. Don't allow waste of good food in the garden.

Weed carefully those late vegetable sowings to give full chance for growth.

As gladioli finish bloom and leaves mature to brown, be ready to lift corms for winter storage.

Cut faded flower stems from Michaelmas daisies promptly to get more color from side branches, into October on some varieties.

GEMWISE

SAPPHIRES American Style

Did you know that the largest proven sapphire deposit in the world is located in the State of Montana in the U.S.A.? The mine in Yogo Gulch extends for five miles and is becoming a major producer.

The Yogo Gulch deposit was first discovered by accident in the 1890's. A group of miners happened upon it in their search for gold, at first mistaking the gem crystals for broken bits of glass.

The mine was successfully worked for 30 years and then shut down. It was not until 1977 that serious mining was resumed. About 70,000 tons of rock have been processed since then.

The Yogo deposit is the only one which is still in its place of formation. All other sapphire deposits are alluvial, that is, the gem material broke loose from its host rock through weathering, was washed away into rivers and streams, and was buried beneath sand and debris.

The American Gem Society recently presented to the Smithsonian Institution a collection of jewelry set with American gemstones. The collection was designed by Aldo Cipullo, a famous New York designer, and manufactured by top American Gem Society jewelry manufacturers plus a few friends of AGS. Of the 31 pieces in the collection, seven of them contain Montana sapphires.

The AGS American Gemstone Jewelry Collection will be touring the U.S.A. for two years. Hopefully, it will come to Canada so you can see these fine pieces. In the meantime, be sure to come into our store and see the lovely collection of sapphire jewelry we keep in stock.

Judgment reserved on Minnie Mountain plan

Judgment was reserved this week by the B.C. Court of Appeal in Vancouver on a bid by Broadmead Farms Ltd. and Saanich municipality to reverse a B.C. Supreme Court decision blocking a 70-acre residential development on Minnie Mountain at Ten Mile Point.

Lawrence Fast, counsel for the Cadboro Bay Ratepayers Association, said Friday the decision of the court is not expected for several weeks.

The appeal was heard for three days by Justices E.E. Hinkson, James Macdonald and Ernest Bull.

A Saanich bylaw permitting the development was quashed last December by Mr. Justice William Trainor who found there was a reasonable apprehension of bias by an ordinary citizen because Ald. David Paterson voted in favor of the bylaw which passed by one vote.

Paterson is office manager for Pearlman and Lindholm law firm which at that time also provided legal services to Saanich. This meant, said Trainor, that Paterson had an indirect interest in the contract with Saanich.

Before the judge

Judge Harold Alder found a picketer guilty of wilful damage following a trial in provincial court Friday but gave the 27-year-old man an absolute discharge.

Graham Lee, 1440 Jamaica Road, was charged in connection with a Dec. 29 incident in the 400-block Catherine.

Lee, who was defended by lawyer Brian Smith, was accused of kicking the headlight of a truck which had been loaded with beer at Jasper Trucking where Lee was employed.

A dispute had arisen between Lee and the complainant because Lee thought there was an attempt to run him over while he was picketing the business premises.

After finding Lee guilty, Alder handed out the absolute discharge.

Judge Blake Allan sentenced a 22-year-old Esquimalt man to 15 days in jail for driving while under suspension.

Douglas George Scudamore, 867 Fleming, who pleaded guilty, was stopped Sept. 6 by Esquimalt police in the 900-block Admirals.

When asked for his licence, Scudamore said he didn't have it and admitted his driving privileges were suspended April 18 this year. Scudamore had two previous convictions for failing to remain at the scene of an accident and received fines both times.

Bail was denied 19-year-old Patrick Allan Joynson, 310 Roberts.

Joynson was charged with auto theft and possession of stolen property.

After the bail hearing, Joynson was remanded until next Tuesday for election of trial method.

A condition for release of a 19-year-old man was that he go to the Drug and Alcohol Rehabilitation Society for counselling.

Michael Lloyd Thomas, 3149 Cook, was charged with breaking into a pharmacy at 3520 Quadra and possession of a quantity of stolen drugs.

Allan ordered his release on $1,000 recognizance bail and remanded Thomas until next Friday for plea. Thomas elected trial by magistrate.

Two men were given conditional discharges after pleading guilty to wilful damage.

Daniel Hawthorne, 21, of 1146 Alder, and Blair William Boland, 19, of 673 St. Patrick, were also placed on six months probation and ordered to make restitution of $27.50 each to B.C. Telephone.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said they were on vacation in Vernon on Aug. 14 and went drinking that evening. On the way back to their campsite, one of them picked up a rock and threw it at a telephone booth, causing $55 damage. They were arrested at their tent a short time later and held in custody until they sobered up, Laughton said.

Defence lawyer William McElmoyle said the offence was an "unpremeditated, stupid prank" and applied for a discharge with probation.

Fined $350 for impaired driving was 19-year-old Michael Albert Bergerud, 1690 Stanhope Place. He was also prohibited from driving for 12 months and ordered by Allan to take impaired drivers and defensive driving courses.

Ont. eyes paying tickets at bank

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says the provincial government is considering a plan to have parking tickets paid at banks in much the same way that the institutions now handle telephone and hydro bills.

The newspaper says several ministry and bank officials and a cabinet minister confirmed that a plan will be implemented.

Employee pocketed $897, jury decides

A 21-year-old former employee of a rental car agency was found guilty Friday of theft.

Nikola Louise Franke was accused of theft over $200 from Budget Rent-A-Car Victoria Ltd. between Sept. 1 and Sept. 27, 1978. The prosecution said the amount was $897.81.

Although the county court jury deliberated only 10 minutes, it was not the record for the shortest deliberation. That was set in 1977 and matched in 1978 at six minutes.

Franke will remain at large on a summons to appear again in court after Judge Peter Millward said he wanted a pre-sentence report prepared in view of her age and the fact she has no criminal record. She will be sentenced Oct. 10.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the jury a spot audit last October revealed she was short $787.81 for 24 rental contracts for which she did not have cash to cover plus a $110 shortage in her $150 float.

After the discovery, he said she signed over $390 to the company from her final paycheque plus a further $505 bringing the total restitution to $895.

He said the jury should reject her story of the missing money. The accused had said she took her cashbox home on the Labor Day weekend, it was stolen from her car and she was attempting to cover the deficiency by applying current payments from customers to the outstanding amounts, adding in her own money.

He said her story was unreasonable, that there were shortages in her accounts after Sept. 6 and that she repaid the money when the loss was discovered and not before.

Plane's victims recovered

PORT McNeill (CP) — Armed forces personnel recovered the bodies of four victims Friday from the wreckage of a Pacific Coastal Airlines twin-engine plane that crashed 32 kilometres southeast of here.

Earlier attempts to recover the bodies by helicopter from the site, located above a cliff face, were hampered by heavy fog.

The dead were flown to Vancouver for examination.

The four, including the pilot, were killed when the airline's Britten North Islander crashed Tuesday on a flight to Port Hardy from Nanaimo. The remaining five passengers were taken to hospital.

Two of the survivors said the plane had been flying in heavy fog for about 10 minutes before it hit a hill.

Awards for journalism

RICHMOND (CP) — Editor George LeMasurier of Comox District Free Press took top honors Friday night at the presentation of MacMillan Bloedel's 17th annual journalism awards for writers on B.C.'s community newspapers.

LeMasurier received the $750 first prize for a two-part series examining the problems of handicapped children and community efforts to assist them and their parents. It was his third MB award in four years, following a second-place finish last year and a first in 1976.

Runner-up Chris Lloyd of the North Shore News received $375 for a story about a West Vancouver police detective who suffered almost fatal wounds in a bank robbery shootout and later returned to his job.

The presentations at the annual convention of the B.C. and Yukon Community Newspapers Association also included honorable mentions of $150 each to:

— Dave Todd, for three articles about health care problems resulting from financial restrictions on hospitals, published in Monday Magazine of Victoria.

— Peter Grant, for another Monday Magazine series on juvenile delinquency.

— Sydney Jones, of Kamloops News, for her four-part study of child abuse.

— Pat Turkki, of Burns Lake, for a feature article on the relationship between a mentally-retarded boy and his volunteer tutor, published in the Lakes District News-Houston Today.

Winners were selected by John Farrington, publisher and general manager of Nanaimo Free Press; Ted Fairfax, an assistant managing editor of Vancouver Province, and George MacFarlane, a public relations man.

Hitch in hike

JONQUIERE, Que. (CP) — A 37-year-old hitch-hiker got more than he bargained for when someone stopped to give him a ride. The man, wanted in connection with the theft of fur coats worth $100,000, was picked up by a policeman driving an unmarked car.

CHURCH NEWS

U.K. author at deanery

Dr. James Packer, formerly associate principal of Trinity College, Bristol, England, and author of the best-seller Knowing God among other popular Christian books, will be the speaker at Victoria's Anglican deanery workshop on Saturday, Sept. 29, at 2:30 p.m.

The workshop, at St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra, is designed as an afternoon of Christian exploration and fellowship around the theme The Committed Christian in the '80s—A Mission to Ourselves.

Under Packer's leadership, participants will try to find answers to the many problems facing the everyday Christian in fast-changing western society.

Sunday visitor at knox

Rev. David Smith of Knox Presbyterian Church, Victoria, will be assisted this Sunday in the morning worship by a former minister of the congregation, Rev. David Murphy, of Toronto, associate secretary of the board of congregational life of the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Murphy is visiting as a consultant in a stewardship workshop for the Vancouver Island Presbytery, held in Duncan today.

New structure to replace picturesque St. Elizabeth's

Catholics replacing landmark in Sidney

Worshippers at picturesque St. Elizabeth's Roman Catholic church in Sidney attended mass there for the last time last Sunday.

The pretty little church on 3rd Avenue, built in 1911, is being demolished to make way for a larger, multi-purpose building, deemed necessary for a growing congregation.

Reid Hannan, chairman of the Saanich Peninsula Parish Council, said the new building will cover 7,250 square feet and seat up to 480 people under plans drawn up by architect David Hambleton.

The old church had been attempting to cope with the 350 families who worship at St. Elizabeth's.

Plans for the new church provide for a principal space area to be used for permanent gatherings as well as Sunday masses. The altar, priest's chair and lectern will be moveable and fairly remote from meeting rooms which will be convertible to overflow space.

There will be a small permanent chapel to seat up to 50 for daily masses, and a kitchen large enough to prepare lunches and simple meals.

The building is planned to retain the features of a church for regular worship as well as be a centre for the parish's active community life.

Hannan said the old church was too small and the congregation had outgrown it. "We need more room and the old church is not worth spending money on."

Village seminars start Friday

The first of three special fall seminars presented by Vancouver Island Christian Village will be held Friday Sept. 28 and Saturday 29 at Queenswood House of Studies, 2494 Arbutus.

The subject of this seminar is Christian Principles of Private and Telephone Counselling.

The seminar teacher is Ethel Jones, who will travel from Seattle to conduct the weekend meetings. Mrs. Jones, a widow, mother of two, grandmother of three, and spiritual mother of many, has had much experience in full-time Bible teaching.

The meetings will be held Friday, Sept. 28, from 7-9 p.m., and Saturday, Sept. 29, from 10-noon. All are welcome to attend.

For further information and registration, call 598-7372. (Mon.-Fri. 1-6 p.m.).

WORLD CONCERN will be the focus of services Sunday at Victoria Alliance Church, 1792 Townley.

Speaker will be Henry Friesen, new executive director of World Concern Canada, the Canadian arm of World Concern/Crista International, a Pacific Northwest Christian humanitarian, international relief and self-help development agency.

The organization works directly with national churches, community action groups, missionary organizations and individuals to augment its services.

Last year it spent 88.8 per cent of its contributions on overseas projects.

A sacrifice offering will be taken Sunday evening to aid Indochinese refugees.

THE SINGING group Trinity Sound, led by Gary Kerychuk of Comox, will be in Victoria Thursday. The service will be at 7:30 p.m. at Oldfield Road Gospel Chapel (at the corner of Old West Saanich and Oldfield roads). All are welcome.

Unitarian Service Committee of Canada executive director Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova has launched the USC's largest annual appeal, with a Christmas target of $3.6 million in funds and gifts-in-kind.

Speaking in Montreal, Dr. Hitschmanova said, "With unemployment and soaring prices, times are very difficult for many people in Canada, but even the worst cases cannot compare with the neediest in developing countries who are without any form of social assistance." nual speaking tour will cover 19 communities and take her to Montreal, Quebec City, the prairies and B.C.

A nondenominational, nonpolitical and nonracial agency, the USC board approved support of 82 projects in 11 countries during 1979-80. Overhead is a low 9.79 per cent of total income. Headquarters of USC Canada is 56 Sparks Street, Ottawa.

COLWOOD Pentecostal church will celebrate its fifth anniversary next weekend.

Guest speaker will be Rev. Paul Hawkes of Saskatoon, pastor of Glad Tidings Pentecostal church when its congregation made a decision to start a daughter church in Colwood.

Pastor Don McMillan was called from Winnipeg to pioneer the venture. The first service of the new church was held in Colwood Children's hall with 20 people, half of them children.

Within a short time, Hartshorne Construction erected an attractive, spacious new church building to accommodate 400 people. The congregation moved from the hall to the new church building Nov. 1, 1975, and has experienced good growth.

There will be a banquet on Friday, Sept. 28 at the Leonardo da Vinci Centre at 7 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 29 at 7 p.m. an informal service at the church will be followed by fellowship.

Hawkes will speak on Sunday, Sept. 30 at the 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. services.

A CONGREGATIONAL meeting at the Victoria Truth Centre, 1201 Fort, will be held Wednesday at 8 p.m., when Dr. Emma Smiley will answer written questions concerning the church's ministry. A friendship hour will follow from 9 to 10 p.m.

PIANIST AND soloist Al Willms will be featured at the 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. services of Esquimalt Church of the Nazarene Sunday. The church is at 886 Craigflower.

A CELEBRATION service for United Church youth will be held Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in Metropolitan United church chapel.

ALL TEENAGE youth are invited to a festival of faith Oct. 5 to 8 in Port Alberni. An opportunity to make new friends, share faith and enjoy Christian fellowship will include storytellers, seminars, a gospel rock group and sports.

Registration forms are available in area United Churches.

Retirement service set

The two congregations of St. John's Anglican Church, 1611 Quadra, will combine at a 10:15 a.m. service Sunday to celebrate the retirement of Rev. Christopher Lonsdale, priest assistant for the past four years.

Lonsdale's distinguished career has spanned two continents. Born in India, educated at Westminster School in England, he returned to India with the Imperial Indian Police Force and culminated his career there as principal of the Madras police academy.

In 1947, when India gained independence, he came to Canada and taught at Shawnigan Lake Boy's School for eight years, during which time he prepared himself for the ministry.

He gained the title of STh and began his priestly ministry at St. James' Church, Armstrong, in the Kootenay diocese.

In 1959 he became rector of St. Peter's, Comox, and nine years later moved to All Saints' in View Royal.

Lonsdale is perhaps best known for his work at Camp Columbia, where he has been deeply involved in management and programs of the camp, located on Thetis Island.

Mr. and Mrs. Londsale will continue to live in Victoria and he will remain as honorary assistant at St. John's.

He will preach at the 10:15 a.m. service which will be followed by a reception in the parish hall. All are welcome.

Colwood Baptists celebrate

The "furniture store" church that began some years ago with five families meeting in a home, now meets in its own attractive premises at 2612 Sooke Road.

Sparked by Rev. Joe Ratcliffe's dream of a church to serve this area, it was "mothered" by Emmanuel Baptist church through Pastor Norman Archer's interest in outreach. The pastor is the Rev. Gordon Patterson who ministers to all ages.

Each Sunday morning an average attendance of 175 to 200 meets to worship. An active Sunday school strains the church premises to the limit so classes must also meet in the pastor's home.

To celebrate its third anniversary on Sunday, the speaker at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. is Rev. Lloyd-Crawford, from New Zealand, now ministering at First Baptist Church, Nanaimo.

Crawford has had several preaching ministries in Great Britain, Canada and Southeast Asia.

The public is invited.

Perspectives

By REV. JOHN A. DAVIDSON

A few years ago Victor Murray, an English professor of education who after his retirement had a useful second career as a lay theologian, made this statement in a book on religious education:

"In the full-orbed Christian faith there seem to be five elements. There is something to know, something to feel, something to choose, something to do, and something to belong to. Knowledge, feeling, morals, action, and belonging, are all involved."

First, then, in Christian faith there is something to know. Christianity is an historical religion—and not only in the sense that it has had a long run in history, but also in the sense that its foundation is in historical event.

Jesus Christ is a person in history, not a figure in an ancient religious legend. The story of His life and death need not be recounted here. After His death His followers came to awareness He was their living Lord, awareness that in prayer and worship they could have communion with Him. Out of this experience, the resurrection-experience, came the impulse which established and extended the community of faith which is the Church.

Second, in Christian faith there is something to feel. An element of emotion, of strong feeling, is essential in faith. John Macmurray, a Scottish philosopher, put the matter in this way: "Before an intellectual conclusion can become effective in action, an emotional motive must be provided which the intellect itself does not contain."

Without strong feeling, without emotional sustenance, without a sense of awe and mystery, the intellectual acceptance of the fundamental Christian facts is of little real consequence.

W. R. Maltby, an English theologian, put this issue in a realistic perspective when he wrote, "Emotion rises out of truth; emotionalism is poured on it." Christian emotion must come out of Christian truth and must be nourished and directed by it.

Third, in Christian faith there is something to choose—the making of moral choices. Christian knowledge is stated in the indicative mood: it is a declaration of the isness of fact and event.

Christian ethics is expressed in the imperative mood: it is a declaration of the oughtness which results from acceptance of Christian fact and event. John's Gospel gives Jesus saying to His followers, "Love one another, as I have loved you." It is by the principle of love—love as the determination of will to serve the real good of others—that the Christian makes moral choices.

Closely related to this is the fourth dimension of faith, something to do. The Christian is not called to withdraw from the world to places of moral safety: anyone can be "good" and "pure" when he or she has little opportunity to be otherwise. The Christian is called to take initiatives and risks, motivated by love, in the world, to become involved in the world's problems and sufferings.

Fifth, in Christian faith there is something to belong to. Being a Christian is not a solo performance. Fellowship or community is fundamental in Christianity. The community of faith, the Church, is not incidental but integral to the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Despite all the criticism which can properly be made of the Church—and it always has been open to, and deserving of, criticism, the Church is essential in Christian faith. Depsite all its failures and follies it has through the centuries been the agency in the world of the cause of Jesus Christ.

Opposition to gov't edicts a 'sin' in Iran

TEHRAN (Reuter) — Opposition to government decisions in Iran will be regarded in the future as a sin in the eyes of God, one of the country's top clergymen said Friday.

Ayatollah Hossein Ali Montazeri, president of the council of experts reviewing the new Islamic constitution, told a prayer meeting at Teheran University:

"Since we have accepted Islam and its ideology, the carrying out of its principles should be governed by our conscience. Opposition to (Islamic) rulings, whether in general or those of the government, is a sin in the eyes of God."

Iran's proposed theocracy is based on the recently approved article five of the draft constitution which gives ultimate authority to a theological expert.

It is universally accepted that the religious leader will be unofficial head of state, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who would formally rule as the representative of the prophet Mohammad and the 12 imams of the Shi'Ite sect of Islam.

"In our opinion, the prophet has granted leadership to Ali and his 11 sons (12 imams) and, as a result, obedience to the imams is incumbent on the people," Ayatollah Montazeri said.

He defended the ruling clergy against charges that the theologian-leader would be a dictator.

Dragnet on for PCB tainted meat

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Tons of eggs and chicken meat were being destroyed or held off the market Friday as federal officials revealed that contamination from a cancer-causing chemical has been found in the Midwest.

Investigators were working round the clock to determine whether the banned chemical PCB had also found its way into slaughtered beef, swine and sheep.

Dr. Vernon Spear, regional head of the agriculture department's meat and poultry division in Butte, Mont., said the sampling of slaughtered and processed red meats is "being expanded more each day."

The contamination originated at a hog-processing plant in Billings, Mont., when an estimated 200 gallons of the substance escaped from an electrical transformer. The chemical has been found to cause cancer in animals.

In Washington the agriculture department said Friday that its latest figures show 138,676 pounds of chicken meat are being retained at processing plants in Iowa and Minnesota and "will probably be destroyed." The contaminated meat was found at the Swift and Co. plant in Clinton, Iowa, and at Butterfield Foods in Minnesota, federal officials said.

In the state of Washington, the department said 420,000 pounds of egg products are under voluntary retention at an unidentified egg-processing plant pending test results.

The investigation has expanded steadily since early this month when PCB-contamination forced the slaughter of 300,000 hens and destruction of more than one million eggs at the Ritewood Egg Co. in Franklin, Idaho.

Some firms in Utah also have destroyed egg or cake-mix products while an unknown quantity of chickens and eggs are being held by Montana producers whose feeds may have been contaminated.

On Friday, the agriculture department also said the Campbell Soup Co. had notified federal officials eight days earlier that it received contaminated chicken meat from Butterfield Foods in Minnesota.

A spokesman for the department's food safety and quality service in Washington, D.C., said animal tissue tests on fat and red meat probably will be available next week.

Spear said 40 to 50 slaughtering plants in Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota and South Dakota are being checked for PCB residue.

The contamination began in late June at the Pierce Packing Co. plant in Billings when an electric transformer was broken in an accident and spilled the chemical, commonly used as a collant in transformers manufactured before the agent was banned in April.

The chemical - polychlorinated biphenyls — moved through a filtering process and was later mixed with ground bone and meat scraps in the plant's meat meal processing section, Pierce spokesman Darrell Peterson said.

A list of outlets where the feed was shipped has not been released by the company or government officials.

Rhodesian MP killed

SALISBURY (AP) — Black nationalist guerrillas firing anti-tank rockets have ambushed and killed a white member of the Zimbabwe Rhodesian parliament — the second MP murdered by insurgents in a week, military authorities said Friday.

Theunis de Klerk, 43, married and the father of three children, was killed when guerrillas fired a rocket at a vehicle he was driving on his farm 350 kilometres south of Salisbury, authorities said.

He was the first white member of the biracial government to die in the seven-year war with guerrillas loyal to either Robert Mugabe's Mozambique-based Zimbabwe African National Union or the Zambia-based Zimbabwe African Peoples Union of Joshua Nkomo. The war has cost 20,000 lives, mainly blacks.

De Klerk's death comes less than a week after a group of guerrillas axed to death Terence Mashambanhaka, a black parliamentarian of Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa's United African National Council.

Mashambanhaka, 47, and two party workers were travelling to a tribal reserve to discuss an amnesty offer with about 20 of Mugabe's guerrillas. Their car was halted and they were hacked to death by guerrillas opposed to the amnesty, officials said.

De Klerk held one of the 28 seats reserved for whites in the 100-seat parliament.

Muzorewa, Smith, Nkomo and Mugabe are in London at the British-organized constitutional conference on Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

The conference is Britain's latest attempt to get the warring parties to draw up a mutually acceptable constitution for the former British colony that would lead to an internationally recognized government.

Muzorewa told reporters Friday that the leaders of his delegation voted 11-to-1 to scrap the constitutional veto power of the country's white minority on condition that Britain lift the crippling trade embargo imposed against the previous white minority government. He made the disclosure at the end of the second week of British-sponsored peace talks with the guerrillas in London.

PERSIAN RUG SALE
WHY BUY PERSIAN RUGS?
BECAUSE IF: There is a Persian rug on the floor. What does that tell you about its owner? Probably that he is well-off. Also, he'll be a secure person because a Persian rug is a good saleable item in these inflation-ridden times. It is easier to sell expensive Oriental carpets today in a sluggish economy than it was in the 1950's and 60's although the average price of an authentic Oriental carpet has greatly increased in recent years. An Oriental rug is an excellent hedge against inflation because its value increases constantly. The reason for this is the increased wealth and industrialization of Mid-East countries. Weavers and master artists are leaving their traditional work and are entering industrial employment. In Addition the Shah of Iran had introduced compulsory education thereby effectively eliminating the employment of children in rug weaving, says Ejaz Khan of B.C. Palace Ltd. Mr. Khan will be displaying an excellent selection of Persian carpets and rugs that will appeal to the discriminating and budget conscious home decorator and art lovers offered to you at Bargain Prices. Mr. Khan invites you to come and investigate the opportunities provided by Oriental carpets, to make an investment that safeguards your money and provides you with luxury as it appreciates.

Enough 'lost' for 6 bombs

ERWIN, Tenn. (AP) — The nuclear fuel plant which reported at least nine kilograms of weapons-grade uranium missing has lost enough of the material during the last 11 years to make at least six atomic bombs, government records show.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission said Friday its records show that the uranium fabricating plant operated by Nuclear Fuel Services Inc. has reported accumulated inventory losses of 111 kilograms of highly enriched uranium from January 1968 through December 1978.

Dr. Theodore Taylor of Princton University concluded in a 1974 Ford Foundation report, entitled Nuclear Assessed — Risks and Safeguards, that with the right technology, a nuclear weapon could be made using less than 18 kilograms of fissionable uranium 235.

"This plant does experience the highest inventory differences of any current licensed facility in the country right now but this is a unique facility," said Robert Burnett, the NRC's director of nuclear safeguards.

"In the licensed sector, this plant handles the most high-enriched uranium of any facility in the country and magnitude of complexity in its process also is greater," he said. "When you handle a lot of material, the inventory differences inherently are going to be higher."

The NRC ordered Nuclear Fuel Services to shut down its Erwin plant Monday after the Getty Oil Co. subsidiary reported at least nine kilograms of 96 per cent fissionable uranium missing in its latest two-month inventory, covering the period June 18 through Aug. 14.

Two aircraft equipped with radiation detectors began low-level flights over the area Friday after the NRC found no glaring accounting errors to explain the loss.

The data from the aerial survey will be compared with a similar survey in November 1977 to determine if some of the missing uranium escaped as a gas.

The plant, which has been fabricating uranium for use in the U.S. Navy's nuclear submarines and experimental reactors since 1957, will be shut down until at least Nov. 1, officials said.

Burnett said a 30-day re-inventory — to include flushing out several kilometres of pipes and chambers — will begin Oct. 1 after the plant's 400 workers complete shutting down the processing line next week.

Inventory differences are normal in plants handling nuclear materials. Because of the thousands of pieces of data involved, such losses, and in some cases gains, usually are attributed to unrecorded waste discharges, accounting errors or residues left in pipes.

'Defects' found in reactors

PARIS (Reuter) — French nuclear industry union leaders said Friday they had found major defects in the steel alloy used in French nuclear reactors that could lead to an accident worse than the radiation leak in Harrisburg, Pa., last March.

The union leaders said cracks were found in a reactor under construction and urged Industry Minister Andre Giraud to stop three new nuclear power stations from going into operation until all necessary checks had been made.

"Unless we get a satisfactory answer, we will order our men to stop work on nuclear sites throughout France," said Michel Roland, national secretary of the Confederation Francaise Democratique du Travail.

The union leaders said the cracks were found during construction of a pressurized water reactor at the Framatome works of the Creusot-Loire Engineering Co.

The cracks, less than a centimetre long, were on the steam generating vessels and tubes of the reactor and had been caused by corrosion, the union leaders said.

The French Electricity Board dismissed the cracks as "minor defects."

France, which has adopted the Westinghous type of reactor built in the U.S., is pressing ahead with a major nuclear program, undeterred by the Harrisburg accident. It has 11 operating nuclear plants and 14 under construction or in the planning stages.

A MEMORY OF LASKER AND TARRASCH

Sam Shapiro, an English professor at Notre Dame, is a great chess promoter. His following remarks on Dr. Emanuel Lasker and Dr. Siegbert Tarrasch make interesting reading:

"As a teenager in New York City, I once saw Dr. Lasker at the Marshall Chess Club, chatting with his old opponent Frank Marshall. Old, ill, poor, he never complained and kept a bemused, philosophical view of the world. He was a great Grandmaster and a great human being. Tarrasch and he dominated German chess when that nation, in its post-Bismarckian surge to power before the First World War, was the strongest chess nation on earth.

"Tarrasch was great, the 'Praeceptor Germaniae,' the formulator of rules, the teacher of two generations. Before his 1904 match with Dr. Lasker, he acidly commented that he had only two words to say to his opponent, with whom he was on the worst of terms: 'Check!' and 'Mate!'

"More perceptively, Lasker remarked that Tarrasch was too dogmatic, too enamored of the rules. 'Tarrasch,' he said, 'lacks the passion that whips the blood'."

WOMAN CHAMPION

International Woman Master Rachel Crotto of New York City scored 10½ out of 11 points in the 1979 U.S. Women's Championship held at the University of California at Los Angeles in mid-July. She was defending co-champion with three-time-champion Diane Savereide of Santa Monica. Ms. Savereide, the highest rated woman player in the U.S., was defeated by Ms. Crotto in the final round.

THE STONEWALL DEFENCE

Sam Shapiro sends the following, played recently in South Bend:

"Here's a model of what Black hopes to achieve with the Stonewall: The powerful Knight at K5 (move 9); the bad Queen's Bishop transformed into a good one, via B-Q2-K1-R4 (moves 12-13-14), and doubled Rooks on the open KB file (moves 17-23-24). While White moves and starts a meaningless pawn-roller on the empty Queenside, Black concentrates against the enemy King. In the end, the White position crumbles under the pressure."

Concorde winds up

LONDON (AP) — Britian's Conservative government will not finance any more research into supersonic travel after next year, said Interior Minister Adam Butler after a meeting with French officials to wind up the controversial Condorde project.

Butler and French Transportation Minister Joel Le Theule agreed at a meeting Friday to allocate the five unsold supersonic Concorde airliners to their flag carriers.

The development of the Concorde, an object of controversy because of fears of how it might affect the environment, has cost the two countries $2.46 billion. The aircraft is capable of a speed of 3,240 kilometres an hour.

Government sources said the meeting was primarily held to "wind up the whole collaborative program."

Oil to increase

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet specialists "expect a considerable increase" in output from Soviet oil wells between 1981 and 1985 by using steam to help pump out the crude, Tass reports.

Florence, the baby sperm whale, lost fight for life Friday when she died of respiratory failure.

Help fails, baby whale dies

SEATTLE (AP) — Despite a 500-kilometre truck trip swaddled in wet mattresses, round-the-clock nursemaiding by veterinarians and the hopes of an army of volunteer babysitters, Florence, the 800-pound baby sperm whale, died Friday in the Seattle Aquarium.

Moments after her heart stopped, her pool was drained and two dozen scientists swarmed over her shiny black carcass, searching for clues to why the baby behemoth might have beached itself last Tuesday near Rockaway, Ore.

Florence died shortly after 11 a.m. when her lungs filled with water that she didn't have the strength to expel, said John Nightingale, aquarium curator.

"She just didn't have the strength to push it out. Her lungs are a yard away from the blow hole. It was as if you ran hard two miles and tried to catch your breath in five seconds."

Dr. Tag Gornall, director of the Marine Resources Center in Seattle who directed a post-mortem, said scientists might find that the whale made its forlorn lunge for the beach because it had been abandoned by its mother due to birth defects. The mammal's umbilical cord was still attached when it was found on the Oregon beach.

Most of the 12-foot carcass was being saved in bottles and plastic bags for study. Pathologists, parasitologists, veterinarians and biologists sliced off chunks of the whale Friday afternoon.

Scientists had kept a day and night vigil over the whale since it was trucked from Rockaway to the aquarium Wednesday morning. When it stopped breathing Friday, Gornall jumped into the water and gave it several injections to stimulate its heart and quiet its trauma, but they did not reverse the dying process.

Gornall called the whale, even in death, "a scientific gold mine" because it is in such good condition. Usually whales beach themselves in remote places and begin to decay before scientists can arrive, he said.

Sheets of paper on the desk of aquarium secretary Amy Vest contained the names of more than 60 private citizens who volunteered for babysitting duty.

Gary Ballew, 35, a biologist, was still soggy Friday afternoon from jumping into the pool with his clothes on to help save the doomed little leviathan.

"We gave her only a one-in-100 chance to live and told everybody that but we still hoped. When she died we all had this strange feeling of inadequacy that controls your life from time to time."

Florence had seemed to be gaining strength. But about 10 a.m. aquarium officials became alarmed when the whale dived to the bottom of the one-metre-deep pool, apparently in distress.

It vomited and started holding its breath, once for as long as six minutes. Gornall said this was a "dive reflex" believed to be a response to stress.

Calif. judge charged with growing marijuana

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — State Court of Appeal Judge Paul Halvonik and his lawyer wife were arraigned on felony drug charges Friday in a case that sent shock waves through California's legal circles.

It was the first time observers could recall a California appeals court jurist being accused of a drug offence.

Halvonik, a 40-year-old appointee of Gov. Edmund Brown, and his wife, Deborah, 37, were arraigned on felony charges that said they grew 323 marijuana plants in their home.

Mrs. Halvonik also was arraigned on charges of possessing one-third of a gram of cocaine, which police said they found in a desk drawer during a search of the couple's home.

Police raided the Halvoniks' posh Oakland home Wednesday night, backed by a search warrant obtained after police were called by Mrs. Halvonik to investigate the theft of a television set and a video tape recorder. During the inquiry, officers saw plants they believed were marijuana at the Halvoniks' home.

Mrs. Halvonik pleaded not guilty in Oakland municipal court to charges of possession of marijuana, a misdemeanor, plus cultivation of marijuana and possession of cocaine, both felonies.

Halvonik, charged with possession of marijuana and a felony count of cultivation of marijuana, was granted a delay in entering his plea by Muncipal Judge Roderick Duncan.

Duncan scheduled another hearing Oct. 2.

Halvonik was immediately disqualified from acting as a judge until the felony charge is cleared up. If convicted, he faces automatic removal by the state Supreme Court, and might eventually be prevented from practising law in the state.

Mrs. Halvonik, a former staff lawyer for the Bay Area branch of the American Civil Liberties Union who now has a private law office in Oakland, could be disbarred if convicted.

Jobs created by UAW

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — A United Auto Workers' vice-president says the union's proposed contract with General Motors will create as many as 11,000 new jobs across the United States.

Irving Bluestone, chief of the union's GM division, said the contract's increased number of paid personal holidays and added incentives for early retirement will open employment doors for thousands of auto workers thrown out of work by industry layoffs.

"We will increase by well over 11,000 the number of workers it takes to produce the same products," Bluestone told more than 2,000 union committee members Friday.

Bluestone and other members of the union general counsel are conducting an education course for 3,800 local stewards and committee members on the new contract.

Union employees will vote on ratification of that contract early next week. The contract should be ratified by Oct. 1, he said.

Union president Douglas Frasier also announced that Senator Edward Kennedy (Dem. Mass.) would be the "overwhelming favorite" of his 1.5 million members in a popularity contest against President Carter.

Although Fraser said his union members like Kennedy, he is encouraged that the Carter administration has opened talks with the labor movement to reach a "national accord" on inflation and labor policy.

Inflation has been the main topic of discussion during the briefings, with union leaders stressing the incremented increases in retirees' benefits.

The increases cover the life of the three-year contract, a first in the union's history.

Music world feeling mixed to idea of Beatles' return

NEW YORK (AP) — While Beatle fans around the world await word on whether or not the Fabulous Four will play together at a benefit concert for Asian refugees, others in the music world ponder the long-awaited reunion.

For some, like David Crosby of Crosby, Stills and Nash, the idea that John Lennon, George Harrison, Ringo Starr and Paul McCartney might play together again brings a shrug. Graham Nash said he really is not interested because his priorities right now concern nuclear power and solar energy.

Stephen Stills took a cautious approach: "With those guys, I'll believe it when I see it."

Dionne Warwick jumped at the suggestion and said she would be the first to buy a ticket for a Beatles' concert.

"I've toured all over the world with the Beatles and I don't think anybody loves them as much as I do," she said. "If they do get back together, which I really do doubt, I think it would be great."

The United Nations has asked for the support of the legendary rock stylists in raising money for the Southeast Asian "boat people" at a four-hour concert in Geneva, Switzerland. Elton John would emcee and Leonard Bernstein would conduct the Vienna Philharmonic in an interpretation of Beatle tunes.

Dirk Summers, an independent Los Angeles concert producer who was reported to be handling negotiations, told Garden City, N.Y., radio station WLIR that three of the four Beatles — McCartney, Harrison and Starr — have agreed to perform together. But a spokesman in the office of New York lawyer John Eastman, McCartney's brother-in-law, said McCartney would not agree to perform in such a concert.

The Beatles disbanded in 1970 after the release of their last album, Hey Jude. For a while before the split, some members of the group had performed solo. John Lennon did Two Virgins and Wedding Album in 1969. Harrison did Electronic Sound and Wonderwall Music that same year.

Their last U.S. concert appearance was in New York at Shea Stadium in 1966. Sid Bernstein, who put together that concert, ran a full-page advertisement in The Times three weeks ago saying the group might raise about $500 million for the boat people by doing concerts.

The success of last January's rock and disco benefit by the Bee Gees and other performers — which raised about $4 million for United Nations Children's Fund — encouraged UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to endorse the Beatle idea.

Snowfalls block passes

BOLZANO, Italy (Reuter) — Snow fell on the Italian Alps and heavy rains drenched northern Italy as chilly autumn weather ended the country's long, dry summer.

Officials said vehicles have to use chains to cross the Brenner pass into Austria and on other high roads in the Alps north of Bolzano.

The rain which has lashed northern Italy for 36 hours added to the misery of 3,000 persons left homeless by Wednesday's earthquake.

Kidnappers seize U.S. executive

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Kidnappers seized U.S. executive Dennis McDonald and a Puerto Rican co-worker and killed their bodyguard in the latest political violence to embroil foreign residents of El Salvador.

Police said they believe the abduction Friday was related to a series of leftist attacks that claimed the lives of four Salvadorans earlier in the day.

McDonald, general-manager of California-based Beckman Instruments, and Fausto Buchelli were ambushed in a shootout after they left their factory Friday evening and drove along the nine-kilometre road into San Salvador, police said.

Papal site blasted

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A bomb hidden in a trash can exploded less than 100 metres from the site of a controversial platform where Pope John Paul will celebrate a mass, police say.

No one was injured in the Friday blast, which scattered debris 50 metres.

The explosion occurred at a point midway between the Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul and the platform the city is building.

Police cordoned off the area and summoned the bomb unit and U.S. secret service agents, who will provide security for the Pope's visit to Philadelphia on Oct. 3-4.

The composition of the explosive device is not immediately known.

Astronaut Schirra foresees aliens in our future

Wally Schirra in Victoria for convention

By AL FORREST

Astronaut Wally Schirra said in Victoria today he is confident man will contact life in other solar systems but it would be a longshot for the historic event to happen before the year 2000.

Schirra said the latest U.S. unmanned space probes are turning up all sorts of surprises and the overwhelming odds are in favor of some form of life elsewhere in the universe.

"The problem is one of distance," he said in an interview.

"The nearest known star is four-and-one-third light years away. This means if we said 'hello' today it would take at least nine years for someone to answer 'yes?' And that's assuming there is life associated with the nearest star. You can see it would take quite a while to get a meaningful conversation going."

Schirra, 56, said the U.S. is increasing the signals it is sending through the universe, hoping that someone is listening in some solar system.

"Every new signal sent out increases our chances of contacting someone. The odds are overwhelming we will eventually do it but probably not in this century."

Schirra, who made three space trips, including the first Apollo mission, is in Victoria to address a convention of Realty World. Schirra, who lives in Denver, does TV commercials for the company.

One of the reasons Earth may be a little late getting into the inter-planetary communication game is the relative insignificance of our solar system, he said.

"Earthlings have big egos. In movies we assume that other people want to contact us first. But, if intelligent life is trying to contact other life, our solar system might be overlooked because our star (the sun) is relatively small."

All the stories about UFOs hovering around the earth are based on the assumption that other life is interested in us, he said.

"We really have massive egos."

First contact almost certainly will be audio by some form of radio signal, he said.

It may be a long, long time before earthlings make visual contact with other beings.

The first big discovery, he said, would be to confirm that there are planets in other solar systems.

"We assume there are but it hasn't been confirmed. When it is, it will makeheadlines around the world because it will open up the probability that life exists out there."

The nearest known star is in the Southern Cross, either Alpha or Beta Centauri, he said.

It would be an exciting discovery to learn of planets associated with those stars.

"We have pretty well ruled out intelligent life in our solar system. We have found many exciting things, but not other beings. We have learned that our moon has been locked in time (virtually unchanged) for 3.9 billion years, while, by contrast, the earth is always changing.

"We are having to rewrite all our books about Jupiter and Saturn. Some geographers theorized that some day we would find a moon made of water — and we did. A moon near Jupiter is all water but covered with dust."

Schirra was the fifth American in space, making his first trip in a Mercury craft on Oct. 3, 1962, almost 17 years ago to the day.

Later flights were in a Gemini in December, 1965, and Apollo in 1968.

In all he spent more than 295 hours in space.

In a speech to the Realty World convention today, he urged realtors to take command of whatever task they set for themselves and to strive for excellence.

Petition urges bigger pensions

SASKATOON (CP) — Canadians should have a basic pension plan providing 60 to 70 per cent of the country's average industrial wage, says a petition to be presented in Moncton next week to federal Health Minister David Crombie.

New car smell cancer cause?

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — That new car smell may be yet another source of cancer, says a new study by three chemists at the New England Institute for Life Sciences.

Made public this week at a scientific conference, the study said research on new cars disclosed significant amounts of nitrosamines, chemicals found to be carcinogenic in tests on animals.

A story in today's editions of The Inquirer says the authors of the report, Dr. D. P. Rounbehler, Dr. J. Reisch and Dr. D. H. Fine say whiffing new car interiors probably packs more carcinogenic punch than bacon and the same as beer, two items in which nitrosamines also have been found.

The scientists said they studied 38 new cars produced by 10 manufacturers in the United States, Britain, West Germany and Japan. They declined to identify the manufacturers.

The researchers said they did not try to pinpoint the sources of the nitrosamines but theorized the chemicals may come from vinyl fabrics, rubber products and glues, all known to contain nitrosamines, the newspaper said.

In the case of at least one U.S. car, air inside a spare tire well disclosed particularly high concentrations of the chemicals, they said.

Scientists are debating whether low-level nitrosamines can cause cancer in humans.

Gilmore returning to talks

Mediator Clark Gilmore will give one more try to resolve a dispute over a new labor contract for city electrical workers.

Gilmore, who has filed a report to Labor Minister Allan Williams following a futile period of mediation, said Friday he will return to the bargaining table Monday.

Meanwhile, the 15 members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers employed by the city returned to their jobs Friday after four days of unrest during which they picketed city hall and the police station.

jazz

By LEONARD FEATHER

The past year has been marked by a rare efflorecence of women performers in jazz. Principally as a result of the successful Women's Jazz Festivals, held in March of 1978 and 1979 at Kansas City (and now being widely imitated in other cities), job opportunities for musicians long victimized by sex discrimination have been slowly improving.

Most of the great records by women instrumentalists of the past are lying cobweb-covered on the shelves of major record companies. They refuse to reissue them and, ironically, don't bother to prevent small companies from appropriating and releasing them without permission in sloppily produced packages. However, new LPs are appearing, produced by legitimate operators, three of which offer a rare study in contrasts.

Mary Lou Williams, heard in Solo Recital — Montreux Jazz Festival 1978 (Pablo Live 2308-218), is herself almost a living history of jazz. The first cut of her live album, played without accompaniment, finds her treading a confident path from spirituals through ragtime to blues, Kansas City swing and boogie-woogie. She negotiates each style as if it were her private domain.

Later, in standards (The Man I Love, Tea for Two), her best known original blues tunes (Little Joe From Chicago, What's Your Story Morning Glory) and a haunting soliloquy, Concerto Alone at Montreux, Williams brings her personal mix of power, energy and harmonic finesse to a rainbow of moods that remind us of her perennial progressiveness. During almost 50 years as a recording artist she has continued to broaden her outlook, allying her basic pre-swing era tenets with the values of today. This is the most successful of her series of pablo Albums. Rates five stars.

Joanne Brackeen, whose star has been swiftly ascending during the past few years, has moved to Columbia Records via its Tappan Zee affiliate. Her first album for the label, Keyed In (Columbia JC 36075), will bring her to a much broader audience than she reached in a series of albums on independent labels. This makes it all the more regrettable that Columbia has not seen fit to provide liner notes. The foldout cover, offering nothing but a two-foot-long drawing of a key, is hardly an exercise in subtlety.

An alumna of the Woody Shaw, Art Blakey, Stan Getz and many other combos, Brackeen now leads a splendidly unified trio with Jack De Johnette on drums and Eddie Gomez on bass. She has made giant steps both as pianist and composer. A fine piano, superbly recorded, brings out the full value of the seven original compositions that make up this LP.

Let Me Know, a stately theme with rolling trio interplay, El Mayorazgo with its odd mixture of Mexican and quasi-Oriental sounds, and Twin Dreams with its quirky repeated bass figure are among the most dynamically inventive of Brackeen's works. Though she is closer to McCoy Tyner than to any other contemporary, Brackeen's command of every area from tonality to free-music Cecil Taylor avant-gardism marks her as one of the freshest piano innovators of recent years. Four and a half stars.

Toshiki Akiyoshi's success as composer and bandleader has limited her activity as a piano soloist, but Dedications (Inner City 6046) finds her in good company, with bass and drums, performing works by seven of her favorite musicians. She is in high gear and full control on Tempus Fujit, written by Bud Powell, the early be-bop pioneer who helped formulate her style.

Akiyoshi's territory is dead center: more orthodox and tonal than Brackeen but less tradition-rooted than Williams. Her best cut is an old Oscar Pettiford blues, Swingin' Till The Girls Come Home. Originally an uneventful but ebullient blues line, it is sublimated here through a slowed down tempo and a gently chorded approach that greatly enhances the melody. Three starts.

Short Cuts: Louie Bellson Jam (Pablo 2310-838) is misleadingly titled, since most cuts have small band arrangements. Notable for the luminous presence of the late trumpeter Blue Mitchell, this was one of his last albums. The opening number is Mitchell's engaging Melody for Thelma. His horn is ideally suited to Bellson's entrancing ballad Time To Ride a Moonbeam. Four stars...Cal Collins' Blues on My Mind (Concord Jazz 95) finds the guitarist in splendidly assertive shape, but his accompanying rhythm team could have been stronger. Give it three.

Singer Judson. . .in the beholder's ear

Rockland rolls in

By JANE COVERNTON

The young man walked into Rob Mingay's office wearing a three-piece suit and carrying a guitar.

Promoter Mingay, thought "Oh, no. Another lounge act".

But the young man turned out to be Micheal Judson and according to Mingay, "He really knocked me out."

Now Judson is the first artist to cut a record completely in Victoria — with Mingay's new record company, Rockland Records.

The record — California Boy — has been on the charts at CKDA for a couple of weeks. It started at number 25, went up to 14, and is now back to 18.

CKDA program director, Vince Cownden gives the ultimate Canadian compliment to the single — it could have been produced in Toronto.

"I think it's a darn good record. It's desirable because you can play it anytime from 6 a.m. to midnight."

Cownden is the kind of program director who "has his ears on" according to Mingay. That means he's willing to listen to new talent.

And, according to Mingay, DA is a "breakthrough station". That means that other stations pay attention to what makes it on DA.

Breakthrough is exactly what Mingay and Judson need. Mingay has already spent about $25,000 just getting Judson and the new record label off the ground.

Judson is the key. The plan is to take him across the country, playing showcase rooms, as the single breaks. Then float out an album by next spring.

It's a risky business. But Mingay thinks he's got a couple of things going for him.

He has less overhead than a large studio. Recording is done at Keye Recordings, owned by Mike Grieve, Mingay's partner in the new company.

Then there is the hot-shot promotion man they hired to hustle the record. Jay Gold comes to Rockland from Mushroom.

And last, but certainly not least in Mingay's mind is Judson's talent.

"He plays good clean driving rock. Judson is a great song-writer. I think it's going to happen. It's a good strong radio record."

Radio music is exactly what Judson is hoping to produce on his album. He says he believes in pop music as an art form, but when asked what art is:

"Art is in the ear of the beholder. You have to have an audience. Unless you believe in the intrinsic value of a guy sitting in the studio making music for himself and the universe."

The album will draw on 28-year-old Judson's experience in the world. He says he's done everything from training circus horses to being a straight businessman.

"I'm going to write The Book of Scams someday," he says.

He thinks all that experience "supporting the music disease" has been good for him and his music.

"I'm not a lyric cynic. I'm definately an optimist," says Judson.

Well you have to be in this business.

And the record — the story of a guy who is in one place and wants to be in another — is inoffensive enough to take Judson to the place he wants to be.

Lots of life in theatres

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Live theatre is suddenly very much alive in Victoria.

Looking at the theatre situation from the threshold of the new season, this fall and winter holds promise of being the best — dramatically speaking — in memory.

The range is from farce to mime, from drama of powerful impact in a 20th century masterpiece to a one-man Canadian show plus a quite lavish spicing of musicals.

What is truly remarkable is that we will be seeing no less than seven Canadian-written pieces them already pronounced appearing on the stages of the Belfry Theatre and McPherson Playhouse.

Two that have made it in)ernationally are coming to the Mac, brought by their Vancouver companies with assistance from the Canada Council Touring Office.

They are the Vancouver East Cultural Centre's original and phenomenally successful Billy Bishop Goes to War and the Arts Club Theatre's Same Time Next Year by ex-patriate Bernard Slade.

In November Bastion Theatre has John Murell's touching Waiting for the Parade, and concludes its season with a new play by David (Leaving Home) French. Jitters is a comedy about back-stage theatrical traumas that has had rave reviews in the east.

Belfry's Canadian content is confined this year to Codcos's latest Newfie satire, Wnobs, the mime company, Theatre Beyond Words and The Wonderful World of Sarah Binks. Codco is here the week of Oct.30; the others early in the new year.

Two neo-classic comedies of the American theatre and one from the English theatre are being offered, likely as box office insurance.

Bastion has chosen the familial Life With Father as a suitable accompaniment to the Christmas holidays. Victoria Theatre Guild will end its season with the zany doings of You Can't Take It With You.

Bastion has a coup in February with its first-on-the-west coast production of Ira Levin's New York thriller hit, Deathtrap. From there the company moves to the turgid drama of Tennessee Williams' Cat On a Hot Tin Roof. Quite a range from the opening, Feydeau's A Flea in Her Ear.

Belfry has chosen to open its first full season in October, with the Noel Coward comedy, Private Lives. It will be followed by one of the several musical shows to be seen this winter — the very attractive Side By Side By Sondheim. It's a first time for the show in this city, and more welcome than the third or fourth offering of Jacques Brel is ... coming to the Mac.

Another Westcoast premiere is a Belfry scoop. Currently, and for some months past, playing to s.r.o. crowds on Broadway, Irish playwright Hugh Leonard's Da, a comic-poignant memory play, will open at Belfry's intimate theatre in late January. Finally, the subscription season will close with another modern American theatre classic, The Price by Arthur Miller.

As far as the musical theatre is concerned, probably most excitement will be generated by the coming in October of the Tony Award-winning New York musical, Ain't Misbehavin'. It arrives at the Royal in mid October.

There will certainly be Victoria Operatic Society productions in the fall and spring and Pacific Opera's contemplated La Boheme in the new year.

Victoria's third professional company, Kaleidoscope Theatre, also has plans to follow its summer success, Songs from the Cabarets.

The Cabaret show is pretty certain to close its Victoria engagement in early October says Elizabeth Gorrie, a star of the show and Kaleidoscope's artistic director. A possible mainland engagement is being considered but in any event she says, she will be leaving the show to concentrate on a Victoria subscription season of five productions oriented toward family audiences.

Kaleidophonics, the company's popular collaboration with Victoria Symphony Orchestra musicians, will definitely be presented as a Christmas show

A special season dedicated to comedy will mark 50 years of continuous activity for the city's premier amateur organization, Victoria Theatre Guild.

The Guild has produced some memorable shows over the years and opens next week with Neil Simon's The Sunshine Boys.

Compare the gothic tale of Dracula converted into a "diabolical comedy", Bernard Shaw's satirical war commentary, Arms and the Man, and the ribald and farcical Habeas Corpas, for instance.

This is only the known winter theatre world. There are bound to be as yet unknown entries worth a look at the amateur level; even at the professional there could be some surprises.

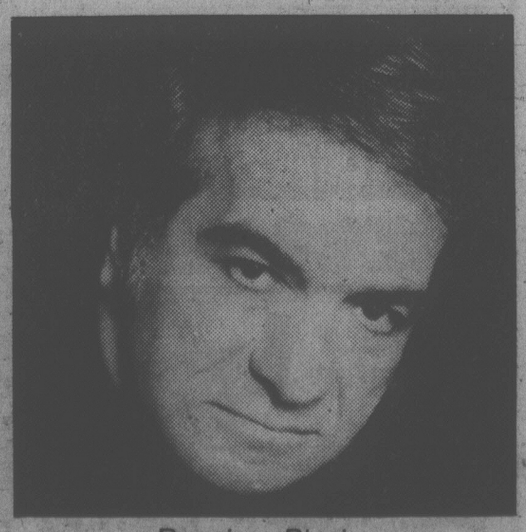
When Ruggiero Ricci was booked for his first violin tour of the Soviet Union in 1960, his regular piano accompanist couldn't make it and Ricci hastily picked an unknown teenager to accompany him. The young woman, Martha Argerich, is now an acclaimed artist in her own right and has volunteered her services for Ricci's 50th anniversary gala at Carnegie Hall Oct. 20.

Some 18,000 young people converged ona race track on Long Island for a 10-hour concert billed as the "reunion concert of the 10th anniversary of Woodstock." Promoter Annette Annechild said the event was not planned to be another Woodstock, which she said "just happened." Taking part were Canned Heat, Stephen Stills, Leslie West, Jorma Kaukonen, John Sebastian, Paul Butterfield, Rick Danko and Michael Shrieve.

Last year, Tammy Wynette sued ex-husband George Jones for lagging on his alimony payments. Now with present husband George Rickey, she appears to have relented and seems to be pushing his singing career. Jones is said to have been rehearsing with Tammy's band, and he made a surprise appearance on her State Fair show in Du Quoin, Ill.



Ruggiero Ricci

Ella Fitzgerald celebrated her Carnegie Hall concert at an after-theater disco party at New York, New York — with Shirley Bassey and Luci Arnaz, a telegram from Frank Sinatra and a phone call from Pearl Bailey.

How does one pick a successor to Arthur Fiedler? Some 18 conductors have been mentioned as candidates for the baton of the legendary leader of the Boston Pops — among them Mitch Miller, Eric Kunzel, John Covelli, John Williams, Newton Wayland, Andre Previn and Fiedler's long-time assistant Harry Ellis Dickson. "We aren't even going to try to replace Arthur Fiedler," said Pops general manager Thomas Morris, "but we must find the very best person to lead the Pops — the crucial word is 'lead'."

Singer Jerry Lee Lewis has been charged with narcotics possession. Lewis was arrested at his home near Memphis where authorities, acting on a tip from Internal Revenue Service agents, discovered quantities of cocaine and marijuana. Lewis was released on $3,000 bail.

Famous here for Cinderella

An international cast of stars is gathering this weekend in Victoria for the performance, Wednesday at University Centre Auditorium, of Rossini's charming comic opera, Cinderella (La Cenerentola).

On hand for that single glamorous evening will be a capacity audience of 1,200 with Lieut.Governor Henry Bell-Irving heading a list of special guests, and television cameras and crew from Seattle's KCTS Channel 9.

KCTS is acting jointly with UVic in the concert presentation of the two-act opera. It has also received support from the B.C. Lottery Fund.

The taping by KCTS is for later broadcast on American PBS. It is said to be the first time that any such Canadian musical production has been televised to this enormous audience. Which makes it, besides glamorous, an historic occasion.

Singing the opera in English will be five notable Canadian artists and two American. The UVic chorus and Victoria Symphony Orchestra will be conducted by George Corwin.

Judith Forst, Canadian mezzo-soprano whose home is Port Moody, has had seven successful seasons with the Metropolitan Opera and has made appearances on every major opera stage in North America. She will sing the title role.

The step-sisters will also be sung by Canadian artists; soprano Iris Fraser, who now resides in Vancouver, has sung the role of Susanna in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro on Austrian television and is a frequent recitalist in the U.S. and Canada. Mezzo Gabrielle Lavigne comes from Montreal. A former CBC Talent Festival winner and finalist in the Metropolitan Auditions, she has appeared with the English National Opera and the Royal Opera in Ghent.

The fairy tale prince, whose name in this version is Don Ramiro, will be sung by Canadian tenor David Astor who is assistant head of the Academy of Voice at the Banff School. His operatic career has included the Royal Opera, Covent Garden, Glyndebourne, Chicago Lyric Opera and the Canadian Opera Company.

Bernard Turgeon, an associate professor of music at UVic and one of Canada's most celebrated baritones, will sing the role of the prince's valet.

The stepmother becomes a stepfather in this version. The pompous nobleman, Don Magnifico, will be sung by prominent American basso buffo, Herbert Beattie. RCA recording artist Donnie Ray Albert will take the part of the prince's advisor.

CBC festival covers town

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Victoria's three main concert halls will be linked next week in hosting events in the week-long CBC Festival Victoria.

Principal downtown centre for festival happenings is McPherson Playhouse. Here the noontime concerts will take place as well as several evening events.

The first noon hour event takes place Monday with Victoria resident pianist Robin Wood.

Tuesday's noon artist will be outstanding folk guitarist Bob Hadley. On Wednesday there will be a concert by the University of Victoria Faculty Ensemble. Their program will include performance of a work by chairman of the Department of Music, Rudolf Komorous.

Mezzo-soprano Judith Forst with pianist Harold Brown will be featured in a song recital on Thursday and Friday noon will feature the Pied Pear folk band.

Two evening events at McPherson and one at the Royal Theatre cover a range of light classical, classical and jazz music.

Monday at the Royal the Festival presentation takes the form of A Night at the Operetta. The music to be performed by Victoria Symphony Orchestra conducted by Timothy Vernon will highlight the music of Offenbach, Strauss and Lehar. Noted Canadian singing stars Ingrid Suderman, Glyn Evans and Bernard Turgeon will be the soloists.

Anton Kuerti, internationally noted Canadian pianist, who is to be soloist with the Victoria Symphony opening pair of concerts, will give a recital Tuesday at the Mac at 8 p.m. He will be playing music by Schumann, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Schubert and Berg.

Wednesday's concert will feature the Don Thompson jazz trio with pianist Thompson, bassist Torben Oxbol and Claude Ranger on drums.

While Wednesday's UVic/KCTS nine opera presentation of Cinderella is a spotlighted event at University Centre, there also will be the gala opening choral concert Sunday, with the Vancouver Bach Choir and University Singers conducted by George Corwin.

Friday University Centre will be the scene of a homecoming performance by Canada's top country-folk artist, Victoria-born Ian Tyson. Sharing the program will be Shari Ulrich who has performed with Pied Pumpkin.

One of CBC's most popular comedy programs, Dr. Bundolo's Pandemonium Medicine Show, will launch its new season at UVic Centre, Friday at 8 p.m.

During Festival week, the CBC late afternoon show, Three's Company, will be aired from Victoria.

Sneezy is back

With a typical flourish and a bragadoccio that almost seems tongue-in-cheek, the star of Hank Williams: the Show He Never Gave, returns to McPherson Playhouse Monday under a banner proclaiming "the great Sneezy Waters and his excellent band."

But when Sneezy performed his celebrated Hank Williams show in Victoria last spring he captivated hundreds of Victorians who would enthusiastically endorse and carry that banner.

Sneezy and the excellent band will be at the Mac on a lap of their successful Canadian tour of a new show. A major United States tour will follow.

An exciting and imaginative style helps Sneezy establish a phenomenal rapport with his audience. His repertoire is eclectic, ranging from hard-luck and country blues, to outrageous.

The technically superior band that really gets off on making good music is comprised of Sneezy, guitar and vocals; George Essery, pedal steel guitar, fiddle, trumpet and banjo; Norm Clarke, tenor sax; Doug Orr, bass, and Richard Patterson, drums.

Waters and band have been part of the Canadian music scene for more than a decade. In Osaka, Japan, in 1970 they were resident entertainers and the following year brought their brand of country blues to such unusual locations as the Hong Kong Hilton and Bangkok.

Stars quizzed on Jordan role

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hamilton Jordan, facing possible appointment of a special prosecutor over allegations of cocaine use, is being described as a participant in a "licentious" 1977 party in Los Angeles.

Leo Wyler, a former Carter fund-raiser, says Jordan and two other White House staff members attended a party at his home. And he told CBS News Thursday night that he felt their "approach to this relaxation was one of . . drugs and girls."

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Herald Examiner reported that the FBI is contacting actress Shirley MacLaine and several others who were present at any of four California parties with Jordan in the fall of 1977. An FBI agent said the agency was looking "into certain allegations involving narcotics use" by Jordan.

The latest reports seem likely to add pressure on the justice department to make a quick decision on whether to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate alleged cocaine use by Jordan, the White House chief of staff. Department officials, who asked not to be named, said Thursday a decision is probable within the next two weeks.

True Britt peek piques Pete

Ekland. . .writes

By RODERICK MANN

At his mountain chalet in Switzerland, Peter Sellers has been taking legal advice over the memoirs of his former wife Britt Ekland, whose book True Britt is being serialized in a mass-circulation British newspaper starting this week.

He is, I know, incensed by the discovery that she intends smearing their private life before the public. And if the advance blurb for the series is anything to go by, he has every right to be angry.

According to Ekland, who is a Swede, her former lovers include Ryan O'Neal, Warren Beatty, the Earl of Lichfield (a cousin of the queen), Rod Stewart and George Hamilton.

Of Beatty she writes: "It was a very fast affair but it took me ages to get over it..." Of O'Neal she says: "After a couple of drinks we liked each other and we went to bed..." About her marriage to Sellers, which took place shortly after they met, she comes up with the old cliche, "Marry in haste, repent at leisure."

Charming stuff, particularly as she has a daughter by Sellers, Victoria, who is 14. Perhaps the fee she received — $200,000, which she must split with her writer — helped convince her that she was doing the right thing.

The bits concerning Sellers will run on Aug. 26 and will discuss not only their private life in detail but also bring up such issues as Sellers' friendship with the British royal family.

Until he hears what she has written, Sellers, I gather, is making no move. A writ has been prepared, but not yet issued.

When I telephoned him in Switzerland, where he is awaiting the start of his new film The Fiendish Plot of Dr. Fu Manchu, to be made in Paris, he told me: "I'm trying to maintain a dignified silence about the whole thing, though it isn't easy. Fortunately I don't have to read what she's written; my lawyers are doing that..."

The Wrong Group: Scriptwriter Joshua Sinclair, who wrote the film Just a Gigolo, which brings Marlene Dietrich back to the screen after an absence of 17 years, has been talking about the difficulties he experienced in persuading the lady to say "yes."

Each time he telephoned her, he says, a maid would answer saying that Dietrich was out. Not until much later did he realize that the "maid" was Dietrich herself.

Finally, he got her on the telephone and she told him:

"I don't want to do the film. I don't want to work again and anyway I don't like what I've been told of the cast. They're all too old-fashioned for me.

"I've been informed that it's Curt Jurgens, Maria Schell, Kim Novak and Carroll Baker. They're all so old-fashioned. Take Kim Novak. She's in this movie and I didn't even know she was still alive..."

Ho-hum. Dietrich, you will recall, is nearly 80.

Another Rocky: The film about Nelson Rockefeller's life which Roger Corman is preparing for next year will be, he tells me, the most expensive picture his company has yet made.

Called Happy and Rocky, the film will span Rockefeller's life until his death and will, I gather, delve into his relationship with Megan Marshak, who was with him when he died.

"We're still in the preliminary planning stages," Corman says. "There's no script yet. And we stil haven't decided whether to use two actors — one to play him as a young man, another for his later years."

Lee Remick is Corman's choice for the role of Happy Rockefeller, and Russell Nype is being mentioned for the role of Rockefeller.

"But nothing's decided yet," adds Corman.

From the Notebook: According to publishing sources, Frederick Sands, the author of the new book The Divine Garbo, which Grosset & Dunlap is bringing out on Oct. 8, actually met Garbo and spent time with her in Switzerland. But her friend Deborah Kerr, who lunched with her just the other day, says: "Everyone who knows her even faintly, let alone well, could tell you there's no way she would ever have talked for publication".

Ars Nova chamber series starts Sunday

Audrey Johnson

A new series of Sunday afternoon chamber concerts by the Ars Nova Ensemble starts this weekend. The concerts take place at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria where starting time is 3 p.m.

The group was formed primarily to promote chamber music comprising wind and string instruments and to place an emphasis on 20th century music and Canadian works. In its founding year, 1969, Ars Nova was a trio consisting of pianist Jacqui Wood (now at Malaspina College); Elfreda Gleam, violinist and former concertmistress of Victoria Symphony, now a Doctor of Music and working in Europe, and Lawrence de la Haye, clarinet, head of the winds department at Victoria Conservatory of Music.

The ensemble gave its first Vancouver performances at Simon Fraser University and the Vancouver Art Gallery, functioning as a quartet with the late Cardo Smalley, viola or violin, and sometimes including Linda Hougland-Daniels, cellist.

Ars Nova currently consists of Mary Ducker (Humphreys) piano; James Kennedy, baroque winds and flute; Lawrence de la Haye, clarinet, and Victoria Sebastian Kereluk, violin.

Many first Canadian performances of works by such composers as Humphrey Searle, Gordon Jacob, Arnold Cooke and Don Banks have been given.

George Essihos is a Victoria musician who throughout his professional life in Seattle and Victoria has continued to prove that a proficient classical musician often makes an effective jazz musician and vice versa.

He began his career as a classical pianist, became a cabaret and nightclub artist, a composer and an accomplished jazz pianist, but has never turned his back on classical music.

A concert he has been invited to give at 2 p.m. in the new Cowichan Theatre at Duncan on Sunday, provides a view of his versatility. The first half of the program consists of Chopin works plus Gershwin piano pieces including the Rhapsody in Blue.

The second half will feature a new trio he has formed, consisting of John Macknight, bass, and Bill Stewart, drums. Both have recently come here from Toronto.

In addition to jazz standards, the group will play Essihos's trio setting of his own impressionistic Egyptian Tombs, which he has expanded to include percussion and bass solos.

"My aim," says George, "is to show how jazz pianism owes a great deal to the Chopin style, both as to harmonic progressions and voicings as well as improvisational patterns.

"Andre Previn used to give similar programs with his trio. Gerhwin of course bridged the gap more than any other composer even to this day."

Taylor Music Scholarship awards have been made to six University of Victoria students. The recipients of $500 scholarships are Janet Underhill and Katherine Duncan of Victoria; Jeffrey Anderson of Lethbridge and Darren Bond of Nelson.

Scholarships of $250 each go to David Millard, North Vancouver and Barbara Flaten, Regina.

The annual scholarship awards honor Dr. Malcolm G. Taylor, first president of the university. They are available to outstanding students in any year of study in the Bachelor of Music program. Recipients are chosen by the Senate Committee on Awards on recommendation of the music department.

LYN HANCOCK this ain't — it's none other than Vancouver disc jockey Racoon Carney, left, who is getting his paws wet in television as he takes the host's chair on the Saturday Show from 7 - 8 p.m. on CKVU channel 13. The 60-minute look at the lower mainland entertainment scene will include on-the-spot reports from the bars, discotheques, pubs, nightclubs, theatres and concerts. Should you think Carney's furry pet is just a public relations person's prop for attention, you're half right. Racoon (left again) has been named official SPCA spokesman for its pending awareness campaign.

Bonnie Raitt's 'Glow' sometimes too perfect

By JOHN PALMER

Bonnie Raitt hasn't had a new record out since 1977, and when word filtered from Los Angeles that she was working with Peter Asher, who produces Linda Ronstadt and James Taylor, some of her fans started to worry. For although Miss Raitt is a child of Hollywood (her father is the musical-comedy star John Raitt), she attracted her initial audience by singing tough country blues. Her subsequent albums drew on the work of a coterie of singer-songwriters that included Jackson Browne, but she remained a gritty, hard-driving singer, and her records preserved a certain raw energy that seemed at odds with the careful, pristine productions Asher is noted for.

"The Glow," Miss Raitt's new album on Warner Brothers Records, arrived in New York this week, along with Miss Raitt, who is one of the principal organizers of the MUSE (Musicians United for Safe Energy) benefit concerts this week at Madison Square Garden. She performed Wednesday and Thursday night, along with Browne, James Taylor and other friends, and Saturday night she's a part of a sold-out MUSE show that features Bruce Springsteen. She spent most of the week's daylight hours darting from the MUSE office to press conferences and talk shows, but she was able to take a few minutes out to talk about "The Glow." To this listener, the album includes the finest vocal performances of her career, and although the playing by the musicians who record with all Asher's artists is sometimes a little too letter perfect, it's surprisingly hard and powerful.

"I'm really proud of the record," Miss Raitt said, "because I did all the vocals live on the first or second takes. There are a few little funny gleeps in there, but Peter said that after the first time you sing a song, it's never the same, so we should leave them in. He's a lot funkier than I expected him to be. In fact, this is the most spontaneous album I've done. On the other ones I overdubbed my vocals, went back and worked on individual phrases and so on. This time I found out that if you have really excellent, professional players, you can record live with them, without having to go back and do tunes over and over."

There are several stylistic departures. The album's title tune, written by the rock bassist Veyler Hildebrand, began as a bluesy sort of number, but Asher suggested a jazz treatment. The result is a smoky, after-hours ambience that Miss Raitt handles exceptionally well. "I know that feeling exactly, that time of the morning and everything," she said with a slightly rueful laugh. "But singing the song that way was a stretch for me. So was "You're Gonna Get What's Coming," which is the first straight, white-rock feel I've attempted." To these ears, that tune is less successful. The performance is fine, but the song is rather ordinary, as are one or two others on the album. Miss Raitt doesn't write many songs, and her biggest problem is still material. "It's hard finding songs," she conceded.

Profile: A salon orchestra

The salon orchestra. Who among today's concertgoers remembers that quite special kind of ensemble or even what the term delineates and how it deviated from any other kind of orchestra?

A flexible ensemble which varied in size and instrumentation, at its core was a piano which provided the harmonic 'fill' and covering for instruments required in the score but not present. The symphony orchestra's string section is replaced by a pair of violins and a cello; the woodwind and brass consists of flute/piccolo, clarinet/sax and perhaps trumpet.

The salon orchestra's literature is highly accommodating. The arrangements can be played by any variable combination of instruments.

At Craigdarroch Castle on Friday at 8 p.m., the Victoria Conservatory of Music will present the first in a series of concerts devoted to music of the salon orchestras. Featured performers in this series will be Lawrence de la Haye, clarinet; James Kennedy, flute; Jean MacRae, violin; Kenneth Nachtigal, cello, and Kelly Charlton, piano.

Music played by the salon ochestras ranged from popular songs to classical transcriptions and arrangements. There being no recordings in its heyday, a great demand existed for the newest music. Thus the great sales potential for piano arrangements and the particular appeal of salon orchestras.

Dowling joins Pacific Wind

Clarinettist Tom Dowling has come from Toronto to become part of a widely known UVic ensemble, the Pacific Wind Quintet. Dowling will add his clarinet to Jesse Read's bassoon, Lanny Pollet's flute, William Benjamin's oboe and Richard Ely's horn.

Last season the quintet played several concerts as guests of the B.C. Music Educator's Conference and for the second consecutive summer were in residence with the Victoria International Festival, where they performed and recorded for CBC.

This fall the ensemble will be a guest of the Oregon State Music Educator's Conference, Oct. 8 to 12. Following a series of concerts and workshops at the conference, the group begins a one-week tour of Oregon with presentations at Portland State University and the University of Oregon.

Appearances are also scheduled at Pearson College, for the Festival Concert Society series in Vancouver and for colleges in Nanaimo, White Rock, Campbell River and Powell River.

Reasonable Roman holiday still possible despite scare stories

ON THE GO
with Jerry Hulse

ROME — Despite all the scare stories over inflation, it's still possible to enjoy a Roman holiday without hocking the Ferrari.

Just stay away from such plush palaces as the Excelsior, the Grand, the Hassler and the Hilton.

THEY'RE KEEN but they're also expensive.

Example: I was booked into one of those establishments at $97 a day. This for a single room — ninety-seven dollars a day without even breakfast. Just a room. Never.

Abruptly, I picked up my bags and strolled one-and-one-half blocks to No. 47 Via Firenze. You may recall a mention in an earlier column of the Pensione Texas.

"Buon giorno!" cried manager Claudio Fontanini. "Buon giorno!"

A CONTRAST TO THE reception I got at the $97-a-day digs: ("Your room isn't ready, yet," the receptionist had said rather stiffly).

So I was lucky. Here I'd rediscovered Rome on $20 a day. Besides a room with private bath, the $20 rate at the Texas included both breakfast and dinner. And while the breakfasts aren't particularly inspirational (a hard roll, a cup of old heart attack and a glass of concentrated orange juice), the dinners are recommendable.

EACH EVENING guests are given a coupon and directed around the corner to Restaurant Toscanella. Should one decide to dine elsewhere the Texas deducts $3.90 from the tab, thus reducing the rate for a single to $16.10 a day.

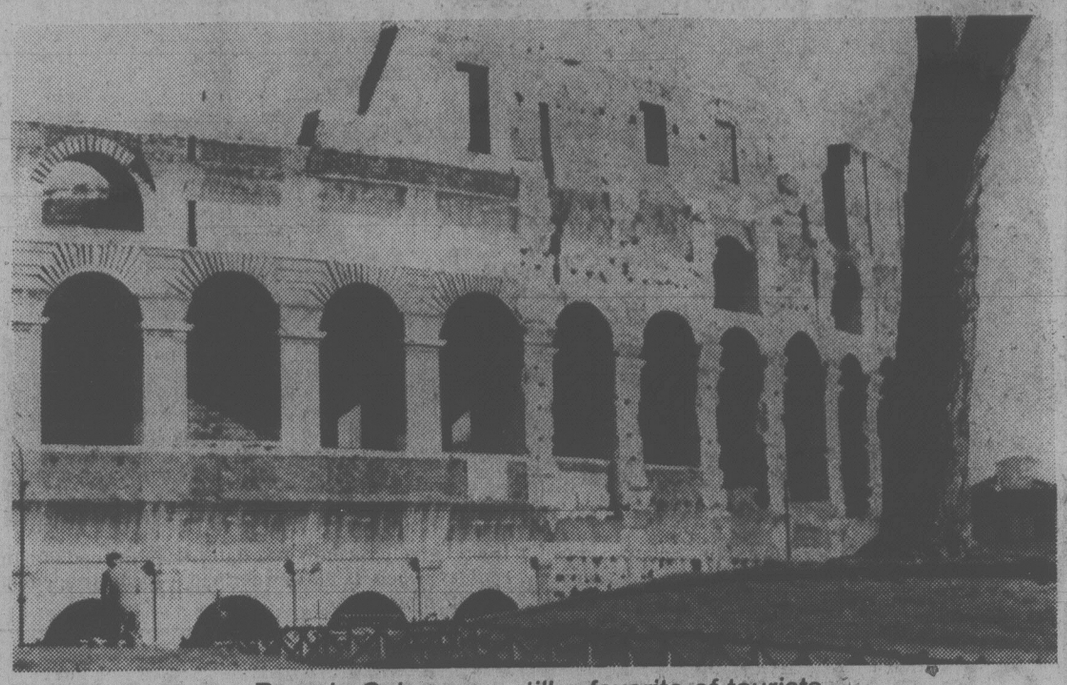
A double with private bath comes to $40 a day with the same two meals.

Although not exactly the Hassler (and while a trifle chilly during winter) in Rome it's a steal.

STILL, THERE ARE other bargains. For instance, the Scalinata di Spagna, a charming hotel-pensione at the top of the Spanish Steps facing the famed and elegant Hassler, and with various similarities. It has the same view. One breathes the same air. The rates, though, are a trifle different.

At the Hassler a single costs up to $70 a day and a double figures into the $80s. At the Scalinata a single figures out to $23.50 a day, with doubles available for $40.

So if atmosphere is your bag, deal yourself into the Scalinata. Breakfast is served in a relaxful, rooftop garden complete with mind-boggling view of Rome. Surrounded by geraniums, ivy and potted plants, one heaves a sigh as St. Peter's Basilica comes into focus along with the Pantheon and the monument to Victor Emmanuel.



Rome's Colosseum still a favorite of tourists

WE RATE THE SCALINATA five stars as the niftiest pensione in all Rome.

Frequently, the Scalinata's guests take their meals at Otello alla Concordia, a cozy trattoria near the Spanish Steps. While the service tends to be a trifle slow, the dining is fair to excellent as well as inexpensive.

In the same general areas, Cafe Greco has been serving Romans since 1760. Its walls are lined with red fabric, paintings and prints, and there are romantic alcoves where two can snuggle over cappuccino — or even a dry martini.

CAFE GRECO TURNS OUT marvelous cakes and finger sandwiches, and frequently its customers appear in T-shirts while its waiters stand by in tails.

At Cafe Greco, politicos in the 1870s met to plan the unification of Italy. Through the centuries it has been a favored meeting place of painters, sculptors, musicians and writers, among them Hans Christian Andersen, Nathaniel Hawthorne, William Thackeray, Mark Twain, Henry James, Jean Baptiste Carot, Jacob Mendelssohn, Franz Liszt and Arturo Toscanini.

SO IT WAS THAT in 1953 the Cafe Greco was declared a national monument.

Ernest Hemingway used to put up at a hotel a couple of blocks away, the d'Inghilterra at 14 Bocca di Leone. A former 17th-century townhouse, it stands in its own pancake-size piazza.

Their rooms fetch $57 a day (single) and $72 (double). There's an extra charge for breakfast as well as air conditioning.

WHILE LACKING the d'Inghilterra's elegance, the neighboring Hotel Condotti at 37 Via Mario dei Fiori is dramatically cheaper. A single with shower can be had for $10.50 a day and a double with bath for $20.50, taxes and service included.

In the same general area other reasonable shelter is available at Hotel Sistina (136 Via Sistina) where breakfast is served in a pleasant rooftop garden. Rates for a room — there are 30 — range from $17 single to $31 double, breakfast and taxes included.

FOR THOSE SEEKING escape from street noises, they could do no better than Hotel Valadier which is sandwiched in between Via Babuino and Via del Corso at 15 Via Vella Fontanella. Neat, clean and peaceful, its rooms are priced from $24 single and $44 double — breakfast, service and taxes included.

On the other hand, if one is searching for excitement, the Valadier is just a whisper from Piazza del Popolo, which currently is the rage with Rome's beautiful people.

THE NO. 1 SPOT at Piazza del Popolo is Rosati's. Here the crowd spoons ice cream and sips Campari while thirsting for attention. Or perhaps even discovery. Gorgeous dolls wait patiently for a contract. Not the Mafia kind. A movie contract, amico, a movie contract.

At Piazza Navona, Rome's loveliest square, Tre Scalini remains the gathering place of Romans as well as rubbernecks. Like Rosati's, Tre Scalini is rated tops by the ice cream-and-Campari crowd.

Behind Piazza Navona, a small triangle of tree-shaded bliss awaits the sightseer at Trattoria il Cartoccio d'Abruzzo. Here the most expensive item on the menu is steak at $5.50. For cannelloni lovers the check comes to under $2. That's hard to beat — even in the boonies.

NEXT DOOR STANDS one of Rome's unsung hotels — the splendid little Raphael at 2 Largo Febo. Its 96 rooms rent for $38 single and $60 double (breakfast, service and tax) and they're worth it. Every penny. Besides being one of Rome's more charming hotels, the Raphael rises in one of its most romantic settings.

From the gardens of the Raphael, couples gather of an evening to follow the sunset across the Eternal City.

Ah to be young again...

IN ANOTHER SPLENDID location, the Hotel Sol at Pantheon faces that Roman landmark, the Pantheon. Beside it the ancient Piazza is awash with the sort of atmosphere that sparks a desire to remain always in Rome.

The hotel's 45 rooms (all with minibar) are available for $16.50 single and $23.50 double.

A former inn, the Hotel Sol at Pantheon dates from 1496.

DOWN THE BLOCK an Italian ice cream bar does business and in the next square guests dine at the little Trattoria Maddalena which is excellent and inexpensive.

Finally we come to Hotel Fontana, a former convent facing storied Trevi Fountain. Rates here are $31 single and $47.50 double — breakfast, service and tax included.

If you're lucky you'll snag a room facing Trevi Fountain.

AFTER THIS GRAB a handful of coins and toss them into the fountain. You know the legend: It guarantees your return to Rome.

Charter boat winter starts

AROUND THE WORLD with Stan Delaplane

We lay alongside the small boat dock at Tortola in the British Virgin Islands. Reflections of our porthole lights bounced on the night water. The island air is warm as mother's love. And island rum would have melted the heart of Blackbeard, the pirate.

"Sail de boat, mahn, sail de boat," said the Tortola boy on the dock's edge. It's just a soft greeting. As we might say, "Take it easy."

I said: "Jus' liming'." Just goofing off. (Nobody's put a handle on the word — some say it's Afriean. A local newspaper column is titled "Limin'.")

Hurricane David bypassed the Virgins except for a spray of rain showers. It's time for the charter boat winter. The storm season is over. Air force pilots, "the hurricane hunters," had a verse for it.

"July, stand by.
August, it's on us.
September, remember.
October, all over."

There are always 70 to 75 charter boats ready to sail from St. Thomas in the American Virgins. About half that from Tortola in the British Virgins.

The cost is $75 to $100 a day per person. Most boats carry four people. Since there's no important destination, you just sail among the islands. Some with map names. Some rocks and cays mapped only in the heads of local fishermen:

Pull-and-be-damned. Throwaway Wife. Peter. Salt, Ginger and Fallen Jerusalem.

Your charter price includes food and drinks. The islands are a free port. St. Croix rum, 99 cents a bottle at the supermarket. (Maybe it's gone up, what hasn't. But it can't be much.)

Lots of Danish beer, for the U.S. bought the U.S. Virgins from Denmark in 1917 for $25,000,000 and some customs hang on. Traffic drives on the left. Result: You have to lean across the passenger seat to see if it's safe to pass.

The charter price is a lot lower than the luxury cruise ships. And I think a whole bunch more fun.

You write for a folder: Charter Boat League. Home port St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands. They'll send you a list of reps in Canada and the United States.

A charter boat man said: "The reps know more about boats and what kind of trip you want to make. It's a specialty. Travel agents know cruise ships, but charter boats — well, you have to know them. They're all different."

What's wrong with it? For me, it was all OK. (Except for one day we had to spend in Charlotte Amalie, the big town on St. Thomas. It's the most popular port in the Caribbean. There are always two, sometimes three or four, cruise ships tied up. They spill a couple of thousand jostling, shopping tourists on the streets.)

For a week we sailed leisurely in Drake's Passage. (Sir Francis sneaked his raiding fleet through here to avoid Spanish surveillance.)

Stopped in bays populated only by rows of solemn pelicans.

We swam with fins and snorkels in water so clear you can see 20 feet down to the light reflecting off white sand bottom.

Took a little shore leave at a small hotel in Tortola. Made an overnight in Caneel Bay Plantation, a wildly expensive and beautiful resort that Laurance Rockefeller built on St. John.

Get a folder. You'll see. Minimum of clothes. Two pairs of sneakers and two swim shorts. A couple of shirts. Shorts. Flashlight. Can of bug repellent.

Campho-Phenique. Ashore, there's a small biting gnat called no-see-ums. So small they can fly formation through the tightest screen. And even Rockefeller can't do a thing about it.

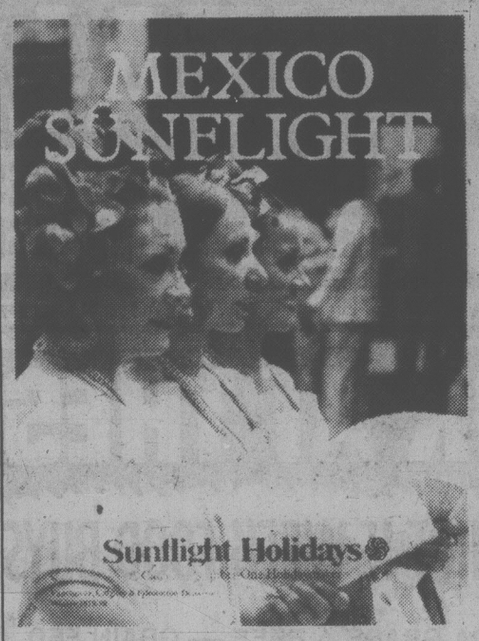
BCAA TRAVEL INTRODUCES

Eleven good reasons to choose a Sunflight holiday this winter.

Nobody gives you a wider choice.
We know you're always looking for new and exciting ways to spend your holidays. And to make your dollars work harder. At Sunflight, we've won the reputation of bringing you the best-planned holidays at the best possible prices. You can choose an action-packed vacation in the sun. A relaxed resort on a golden beach. Or, enjoy a bit of both with a two-centre holiday. And if you've only got time for a mini-break holiday, there's even an exciting three-day flutter in Las Vegas!

Now, where would you like to go?



MEXICO.

Acapulco from $649.
People say it's all here. And they're right! You feel a quickening of the pulse as you land. Beautiful beach people. The rhumba beat. Mariachi bands. See the death-defying divers leap off the cliffs at La Quebrada. Go after game fish. Try some zesty Mexican food. Shop for onyx and silver. Then dance the night away at a fast action disco.

Saturday departures every two weeks from Calgary and Edmonton, Dec. 22 to Mar. 29.

Mazatlan from $389.
It's the resort for the outdoor life, where the beach begins right downtown! There's action at the bullfights and Mexican-style rodeos. Here's deep-sea fishing at its best. Travel native style in a three-wheel 'pneumonia'. Wander through old-fashioned streets exploring craft shops. Later, dine on the finest sea-food, boogie the night away at a disco. Or join strolling couples under the stars.

Saturday weekly departures from Vancouver, Dec. 15 to April 5.

Mexico Magnifico from $629.
Sunflight's two-week adventure. Spend the first five days in Mexico City with its striking architecture, beautiful gardens. Then on to Cuernavaca, City of Eternal Spring and Taxco, the Silver Capital. Ending with a second week in sun-splashed Acapulco.

Friday weekly departures from Vancouver, Dec. 21 to May 30.

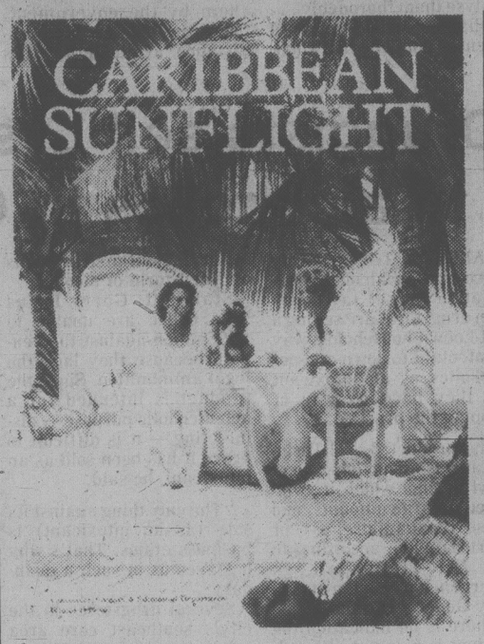
Waikiki Beach, Oahu from $599.
Non-stop action...day and night. A paradise island you can enjoy your way. Relax on golden Waikiki Beach. Scuba-dive. Surf. Here's Diamond Head, Iolani Palace, historic Pearl Harbour. Don't miss the Kodak Hula Show, a native luau and lavish Hawaiian revue. Hunt for treasures in the International Marketplace. Pick up a bright muumuu and aloha shirt.

Weekly departures from Vancouver. Friday, Dec. 21 to Jan. 4; Saturday, Dec. 15 to Jan. 5; Sunday Jan. 13 to Jun. 15

Two Island Holidays from $729.
One week Waikiki plus one week Hawaii.
Get into the swing of things in exciting Waikiki. Then relax for a second week on the scenic, tranquil Kona Coast in Hawaii.

One week Waikiki plus one week Kauai.
Combine action-packed days in Waikiki with a week of breath-taking scenery in Kauai, the Garden Isle.

One week Waikiki plus one week Maui.
Sunflight's most popular two-island holiday. The fun of lively Waikiki and the serenity of sunny Maui with its beautiful beaches, water sports and golf. Whale watching is a must.



THE CARIBBEAN

Barbados from $629
Happiness was invented here! Friendly, smiling people. Azure blue seas. Silvery sands. Fields of rippling sugarcane. Shop for duty-free bargains in china and crystal. Cruise the "Jolly Roger". Enjoy Bajan food specialties...watch native dancers and fire-eaters perform.

Thursday departures weekly from Vancouver, Oct. 30 to Dec. 11, Monday, Dec. 17 to Mar. 31.

Cuba from $759.
A sunshine holiday in an intriguing vacationland. It has some of the most beautiful beaches in the world...crystal white with blue calm seas. And a day trip to Havana is a must. Your Sunflight hotel has an all-inclusive meal plan, no service charges. And no tipping!

Departures from Vancouver, Saturdays — Nov. 10, 24, Dec. 8, then Mondays — Dec. 24, Jan. 7, 21, Feb. 4, 18, Mar. 3, 17, 31, Apr. 14

Jamaica from $849.
Boonoonoonoos...which means perfectly delightful. A vibrant island with lots to see and do. The majestic Blue Mountains. Soft sand beaches. Straw markets. Fabulous Dunn's River Falls. Ride the Governor's Train. Go rafting. Reggae. Then try some of their famous ackee and saltfish. Hot meat patties. And cool off with the sweet milk from coconuts.

Monday departures weekly from Vancouver, Dec. 24 to April 7.

Sunflight prices vary with departure date, length of stay, accommodation and are per person based on 2 persons sharing a room unless otherwise indicated. Please book soon. Some accommodations and departures may be sold out or become unavailable. Air transportation by CP Air, Pacific Western/Transair and Wardair private jet charters and Air Canada and Japan Airlines scheduled service. For complete terms and conditions ask your BCAA Travel agent for Sunflight's Winter Brochures.

LAS VEGAS FROM $179.

3 and 4 night mini-holiday by non-stop charter. Plus a fun passport up to a value of $200! Casinos. Top flight entertainment. Star-studded reviews. The Strip. Odds are, you'll love our Las Vegas!

Departures every Thursday and Sunday from Vancouver, Oct. 4 to May 29.

More good reasons to choose Sunflight.
A Sunflight holiday starts as soon as you step aboard your flight. Right from the start, you're away from the cold and misery of winter with a warm, cheery group heading for the sun. Sunflight is Canada's number one holidaymaker, because we know how to make your holiday one that you'll never forget. A holiday with all those Sunflight features. Like complimentary meals and bar service on private jet charter flights; airconditioned rooms; the attention of a resident Sunflight Representative to make sure your holiday is just the way it should be.

We want to play fair with you.
Our aim is to make sure that you have a "no surprises" holiday. But if something should change we'd like you to know how we look after you. We've built guarantees into every holiday. Guarantees to protect you against a drop in the value of the Canadian dollar. Cancellation guarantees. Price guarantees and guarantees to protect you against changes in hotels or other features of your holiday. We hope we never have to use them, but if we do they're there. You'll find full details in the current Sunflight Holidays Brochure.

Let's peek at Washington North

By STEPHEN SCOTT

OTTAWA (CP) — Picture it: A legislative committee decides to investigate the government. Nervous ministers summoned before it fend off well-researched questions from persistent counsel and legislators.

Television cameras roll. The country watches.

Washington? No. Would you believe Ottawa?

It could happen under proposals for an "activist" Parliament to be put before cabinet shortly by Walter Baker, president of the Privy Council and government leader in the Commons.

Baker wants the Commons committee system to move in the direction of the American congressional system with committees being permitted to start their own investigations with research staffs and lawyers to help.

"The House of Commons should be shameless in borrowing from the congressional system the right to initiate investigations across a broad range of governmental activities," Baker said in a speech this week.

"It should be Parliament's accepted role to search out the weaknesses in departments of government and analyse them thoroughly . . . Parliament should stand as a potential challenger of whatever the government wants to do or is doing."

To do this MPs need to get information through a Commons committee system that the Tories have long said is ineffective.

"Parliament exists for party confrontatvon," said Baker.

"That is healthy, but it is vital for Parliament's effectiveness and reputation that the party confrontations take place over things which are important.

"We have too much shouting over nothing and too many arguments rooted in ignorance.

"We have the members to serve a more activist Parliament. Let's let Parliament challenge government — and its own members."

Baker said the parliamentary system of Canada has failed to bring MPs to grips with the serious economic problems of the last 10 years.

"The deep suspicion that something did not sound right did not find an effective voice (in Parliament) until evidence of approaching disaster was all too obvious."

At present Commons committees are restricted to studying matters assigned to them by the government. There is little research assistance available to MPs who must do their own questioning and that under time constraints.

The committees have no rights to subpoena witnesses and they seldom meet when Parliament has risen. Cameras are excluded.

Baker said the parliamentary and the U.S. congressional systems have strengths and weaknesses — the latter "runs off in all directions at once."

But Canadians were impressed with how fast the American courts and Congress mounted an effective campaign against Richard Nixon during the Watergate affair.

"I believe we were unsure, in the end, if we could have done the same thing."

Baker proposes something less than the large and sophisticated congressional system of standing, special and joint committees with their large staffs and numerous subcommittees.

The House of Representatives appropriations committee has 13 subcommittees and a staff of about 150 and the Senate judiciary committee has seven subcommittees and 200 staff.

Reform of the committee system is part of a package of parliamentary changes Baker is preparing to put before the cabinet. He has received a report from a Tory caucus committee headed by Benno Friesen of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta which studied the matter this summer.

Among other things, the committee has suggested that the Commons have periodic recesses of up to a week so MPs can work in their constituencies.

It said it is unfair to expect MPs, especially those who must travel long distances, to do all their constituency work during weekends.

At the same time studies now are in progress on whether television cameras can be permitted in future committee sessions.

At present only the Commons itself permits television.

Druggists sell Lysol spray to alcoholics in Calgary

CALGARY (CP) — City police and an alcohol rehabilitation worker say downtown drugstores are selling a well-known household spray disinfectant to down-and-out alcoholics as an intoxicant and they have no way of stopping the practice.

The product, Lysol Disinfectant, is about 70-per-cent ethyl alcohol which if swollowed in large amounts, can cause renal failure, eye or heart damage, according to Dr. J.D. McDougall, an emergency physician at Calgary General Hospital.

There is no indication the product is being used by alcoholics in Victoria.

A Calgary police officer says the product is definitely being bootlegged in Calgary because store owners are selling it at inflated prices as an illicit form of alcohol.

Staff-Sgt. Gerry Befus says police are unable to take action against the vendors because they lack the legal ammunition. Since the product is intended for a non-alcoholic purpose — disinfecting — it is difficult to prove it has been sold as an intoxicant, he said.

"The only thing against its sale (as an intoxicant) is business ethics. That's why it leaves us in such a quandary."

Several drugstores in the city's southeast core area sell the product at $2.95 for a 13-ounce can, while supermarkets and corner grocers in outlying areas sell the same can for $2.29.

One drugstore owner, asked if he was aware the Lysol sold over his counter was being drunk, answered, "If I was a man of the cloth I wouldn't be here."

A worker at a city alcohol recovery centre said the bootleg racket begins at 6 a.m., when one of the stores opens its doors and sells Lysol to riverbank drunks who are desperate for a drink.

The worker said bootlegging is also practised among the area's alcoholics, who if they have a few extra dollars buy a spare can and sell it to another at an inflated price.

Users puncture the spray can to allow the air to escape, then pour out the liquid and mix it with a soft drink or water, she says.

Police in the city are looking with interest at a recent Saskatchewan court decision which saw a northern retailer successfully prosecuted under the Liquor Act for selling Lysol.

Bill Logan, a spokesman for the Saskatchewan attorney-general's department, said the ruling was made after the judge heard evidence on the high volume of sales in Lysol by the accused and the inflated price of about $3 a can.

PLANNING FOR LEARNING
Do you co-ordinate educational activities, plan workshops or seminars for adults? Would you like practice in designing programmes which accommodate different learning styles?
Planning for Learning is an experientially-based workshop which will help you develop programme planning skills.
Thursday, October 11, 7:00-10:00 p.m.; Friday, October 12, 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. Fee $30.

DIRECTING THE PLAY
This is an opportunity to participate in and study every step that goes into the production of a play. As a member of this course, you can work alongside costume designers, directors, make-up artists, in the development of the major UVic Theatre Department production this fall — She Stoops to Conquer. See the play materialize on stage during the final dress rehearsal — the climax of this six-week workshop.
Mondays, beginning October 8, 7:00-9:00 p.m. six sessions and dress rehearsal. Fee $40.

MASTERPIECES OF CHINESE LITERATURE
This course will examine representative works of poetry, fiction and drama, which have made China unique in its contribution to world literature throughout the centuries. From the songs of anonymous folk of the 10th century B.C. to the short stories of the present day, form and content will be examined through the best English translations currently available.
Wednesdays, beginning September 26; 7:30-9:30 p.m. 12 sessions. Fee $40.

WOMEN AND POLITICAL PARTICIPATION
University Extension and the Status of Women are co-sponsoring a conference focusing on women's participation in electoral politics. It will be an exciting opportunity to hear and meet many women actively involved in politics at the federal, provincial and local levels. Doris Anderson and Jean Piggot are guest speakers at this conference, which will feature lectures, small group discussions and workshops. Deadline for registration is October 12, so get your applications in early!
October 26, 6:30-10:00 p.m., Keynote Address and Panel Response; October 27, 9:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m. Plenary sessions, discussions, workshops. Fee $15.

WOMEN IN MANAGEMENT: DECISION-MAKING
Specifically designed for women interested in management development, this 2-day workshop offers fundamental concepts to sharpen problem-solving and decision-making skills. Practical ideas and demonstration of how to pinpoint issues and recognize and analyze problems will be emphasized. Opportunities for practise and discussion will be provided.
Thursday and Friday, October 4 and 5; 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. Fee $60 (includes lunches and materials).

News story sparked city author's thriller

By PAUL BENNETT

TROIKA, by David Gurr. McClelland and Stewart. $12.95.

There's probably a good bit of neophyte Victoria author and master-of-many-trades David Gurr in the chief protagonist of his impressive first novel.

Gurr, himself a former senior computer officer in Canada's naval arm, admits he drew on his knowledge of the ways of the senior service in constructing his impressive spy story, Troika.

But he scoffed in an interview in the comfortable study of the Prospect Lake Road home that he designed and built himself at the suggestion that Lieutenant Peter Dravin, RN, contained any more of Gurr in him than his naval ways.

At least one other Victorian thinks differently: the woman who typed his final manuscript recently asked him "How are the twins?", a reference to the lonely burden thrust on Dravin in the final cruel malediction that appears to be characteristic of the Russian psyche.

I'll say no more about the fate of the two other people who dominate this book so as not to spoil Gurr's last plot twist.

They are the Italian-born Jewess Nicola Ruarke, the woman in the troika, who becomes an unwilling pawn of the big powers as they try to manipulate Dravin and his Russian counterpart Alexey Yanov into compromise or defection.

In the beginning, Dravin has been manipulated into compromise. The rest of the book is a prolonged flashback encompassing two actual past incidents, either of which could have been the start of the Third World War.

"What got me started was the amazing story of the attempted defection by the crew of the Soviet guided-missile destroyer Storozhevoy on Nov. 9, 1975, from the port of Riga to Sweden," Gurr said.

"It is unparalleled in modern history and the news reports of the day were rather vague about what really went on. In fact the story didn't break in the West for nearly nine months."

Working back from there was a matter of imagination and sheer hard work. A 1956 incident involving Commander Lionel Crabb came naturally into the time frame for the first meeting of Dravin and Yanov.

Crabb, a famous Royal Navy frogman, disappeared while doing underwater reconnaissance on Russian warships carrying Khrushchev and Bulganin on their visit to Portsmouth which began the thaw in the cold war.

Dravin, son of a mysterious father who was purged during the Stalinist era, goes the public school route and becomes almost impeccably British. His brief background in Russia is known to the British spymasters, but kept from him.

He is surprised to find that Khrushchev recognizes him and begins a search into his background that is repeatedly interrupted over the years until the end reveals all.

For someone who has never been to Russia, Gurr shows a remarkable ability to create what it must have been like behind the Iron Curtain before tourists were made welcome. Take the opening to his chapter on the visit Dravin makes to Russia at the invitation of Khrushchev himself:

"A land of grey. Grey sky in the puddles and bleak glass of the terminal. Grey women lounging at the foot of the ramp they'd just rolled out, grey troops and police lounging with them. Grey faces of officials waiting to hate us . . .

" 'Produce your passes!' Russian voices all around. But for what?

" 'Not this door! That one'."

"All four doors seemingly the same, but our random trickle across the runway was funnelled by the single entry and then dammed into a lake around the island of the immigration desk. The unspoken question offered with every passport: Will the bastards give it back?"

Otherwise flawlessly written, the book loses points in a few places for jumpy transitions in the action and the lack of a glossary to explain the meaning of Russian words sprinkled throughout.

Gurr frankly admits he wrote the book largely to make money, and he seems to be doing that all right. He's been hard at work, four hours or so a day, on his second epic, but has now been dragged away by his New York agent to promote the first book.

Troika comes across as totally authentic in all the important ways, besides having an engrossing plot. If his second novel lives up to the promise of the first, Victoria will have a resident "spy master" of its own.

Words of The Chief

"I never say anything provocative", selected and edited by Margaret Wente. PMA. $3.95.

Rummaging through the bookcase recently, I came across an extraordinary little paperback that is of special interest today, even though it's four years old. Titled I never say anything provocative: Witticisms, Anecdotes and Reflections by Canada's Most Outspoken Politician, it was compiled and edited by Margaret Wente and contains an introduction by John Harbron.

Proving at the outset that this is no ordinary volume, the publisher's blurb on the back cover turns out to be a reliable guide to the contents within. "In a land where most statesmen think they must speak like board chairmen, John Diefenbaker is an anachronism," it reads in part. "He is a political orator in the great nineteenth-century tradition, a political wit who ranks with the immortals . . . Editor Margaret Wente has poured (sic) over decades of the public record to winnow out the very essence of the Diefenbaker style and spirit."

Climatological confusion notwithstanding, this last sentence is an accurate assessment of the contents of this unassuming but important little book. Its 147 pages contain smatterings of John Diefenbaker's opinions and pronouncements on everything and everybody from fishing to Mackenzie King. "What it portrays is the public man," admits editor Wente, but as we can all appreciate, in Diefenbaker's case that is no small thing. "Diefenbaker has always known how to keep his audience enthralled, and in this has taken as much pleasure as he gives," Wente continues. "It is partly this trait which has made him unique in our time."

"I never say anything provocative" takes its title from a comment Diefenbaker made in 1945. The beginning of the book is organized into sections headed "Diefenbaker and the Average Man" ("My main political asset is that I know what Canadians are thinking"), "His Background" ("I modelled myself from the beginning on Theodore Roosevelt") and "On Parliament" ("New members do one of two things — they grow, or they swell"). Later sections deal with power, being in Opposition, domestic and external affairs, contemporaries, principles, attitudes to tradition and the Conservative Party, and Diefenbaker's opinions of the other parties, of the West, of Quebec and the French language, of the U.S., and of the media, Sir John A., and "just about everything else."

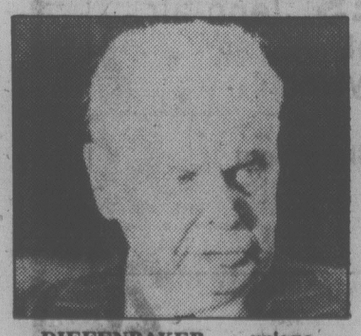
What emerges most clearly by the end of the book is Diefenbaker's extraordinary singularity. His ability to hold two or more conflicting opinions simultaneously is clearly evident in his attitudes to the media, for example. Possibly even more paradoxical is the evidence that his principles were as important to him as his politics. Here's a memorable quotation from a speech to the House of Commons in 1960: "I view this bill of rights as a statement of a Canadian sense of history and of the objectives and standards that we accept in the fashioning of the society in which we believe . . . cynics have said for a thousand years that idealistic charters of freedom are meaningless . . . the same arguments could have been used against the sermon on the mount and the other great declarations of scripture when compared to the actual practices of those of us who are Christians. On the other hand, to what depths mankind would have sunk were it not for those supreme declarations of spiritual values which, touching the heart, cause men to know that there are things greater than materialism."

Decisions of state could be made on the simplest of grounds. On the momentous decision to sell wheat to communist China: "My experience over the years in the ordinary affairs of business and law convinced me that when a Chinese gave his word, he kept it."

At least half of "I never say anything provocative" is devoted to examples of the Diefenbaker wit. He was especially good when lambasting other politicians. ("I love to make Paul Martin mad. You can do it by saying, innocently, that no other member has the ability to compress such small thoughts into so many words"; "Someone said some of (Walter Gordon's) policies were pre-Keynesian. Some of them are pre-Cambrian.")

Diefenbaker also enjoyed a joke at his own expense; one of the high points of this book is his anecdote about what happened when he was asked to give a speech in Spanish during a state visit to Mexico. (He was congratulated for speaking Portuguese with a "fine French-Canadian accent.")

Because this book is a self-portrait, there are few warts in the foreground. Nevertheless, "I never say anything provocative" is valuable because it reveals the man and helps explain the vicissitudes of his political career. It would make a worthwhile addition to anyone's library.



DIEFENBAKER . . . unique

A father's lies and love remembered

By WALT KELLYTHORNE

THE DUKE OF DECEPTION, by Geoffrey Wolff. Random House. $16.95.

When Geoffrey Wolff was told of his father's death he said: "Thank God."

Curious words for one's father, perhaps, dead for two weeks alone in a California room.

"There was no calling them back," Geoffrey Wolff writes of those words, "there is no calling them back now. All I can do now is try to tell what they meant."

"Duke" Wolff: psychotic thief, con-man, drunk, liar.

"He was," writes his son, "a lie, through and through. There was nothing to him but lies, and love."

He continues: "I had this from him always: compassion, care, generosity, endurance."

One might suspect here that sentimentality — always false, always injurious — will inform Geoffrey Wolff's memoir of his father. But, astonishingly, it doesn't, because the central feeling behind sentiment — self-pity — is totally absent here. The son is brutally honest with himself as much as with his father. A dual portrait emerges in these pages.

Unable to accept himself as he was, Duke Wolff invented — name, background, education and work. Without any money of his own he bought the finest things — stole them in fact — and stole money when his credit and his lies ran out. In the 1930s and 40s he designed airplanes and organized production for some of the biggest names in American business. He did all this without knowing what he was talking about. People hated him and people loved him. It didn't matter to Duke Wolff. He lived in a world where only one thing mattered — the truth.

"Truth, he told me, was our most powerful bond. I knew never, never to lie to him. The truth made everything between us possible, he said."

And he was right, of course: the father never lied to his son, not once. But the son, inevitably perhaps, lied to his father. And that was the beginning of the end.

Geoffrey Wolff was a liar all over the place. His lies grew and expanded like crazed amoeba until they formed the basis of a most unpleasant and not untypical young man. And the more he learned about his father the more unpleasant he became.

"I was harder on my father after I had the goods on him than he had ever been on me. He had always had the goods on me. And he had never made cruel use of them."

Fathers, we realize suddenly, have always had the goods on their sons. Perhaps it's a function of their distance, their role as begetters rather than nurturers. Yet how many fathers possess, like Duke Wolff, the "compassion, care, generosity, endurance," that his son remembers as his most important gifts? More than we know? Less?

How difficult it is for anyone — father, son — to break away from someone whose "goods" are too well known for us. Duke Wolff never did. But Geoffrey, his son, finally did.

It was clearly a life-saving measure: whatever sons are supposed to do for fathers (and there really is only one thing they can do), they're not supposed to sacrifice themselves.

So Geoffrey didn't. He left — and he came back. This book — wrenched out alone and with the collaboration of the Duke's former (everything was, in the end, "former" with him except his oldest son) wives, friends, relatives and partners — is a record of his journey.

Roth matures with fine new novel

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

THE GHOST WRITER, by Phillip Roth, McGraw-Hill Ryerson, $11.95.

Almost as if to celebrate the 20th birthday of his first book, Goodbye, Columbus, Philip Roth has given us a beautifully intricate novel that fulfils the promise of those early stories. Indeed, the 23-year-old hero of The Ghost Writer, Nathan Zuckerman, might as well be the author of those stories, so much does he resemble the young Roth trying to break out of the spiritual ghetto of his middle-class Newark-Jewish upbringing and seeking in the person of an older writer, who resembles a cross between Bernard Malamud and Isaac Bashevis Singer, the love and approval to sustain him in his Dedalean flight.

But an older, mature Roth is in command of the narrative here — a Roth who knows when to curb his deadly tongue for parody, who restrains his bent for outlandish comedy and Kafkaesque hallucination, who senses when to be ironic and when to let pathos speak for itself — and that makes all the difference.

It is not just to adulate that young Zuckerman visits the woodsy New England retreat of the fastidious and ascetic E.I. Lonoff, though Roth succeeds marvelously in portraying the archetypal neophyte blushing and tugging at his forelock in the presence of the austere master. Zuckerman has a specific, though symbolic, problem. He has written a story, his most ambitious to date, which is based on an "actual" family quarrel over an inheritance between a widowed mother who wants to use the money to send her twin boys to medical school and her shady younger brother, who wants it to buy a downtown parking lot.

Nathan's normally approving father objects to the story on the grounds that it casts good, hard-working Jews in a bad light for the delectation of the goyim. To convince Nathan of his mistake in wanting to publish it, he shows the story to the distinguished judge that once helped Nathan get into college, who in turn writes a letter asking him, among other things, "Why, in a story with a Jewish background, must there be (a) adultery; (b) incessant fighting within a family over money; (c) warped human behavior in general?" What Nathan wants from Lonoff is the encouragement to break the fetters of family and tribe in the name of art. So at the end of an evening of literary talk, he asks Lonoff what's "wrong" with his stories, to which the maestro replies, "Don't worry too much about 'wrong.' Just keep going. You'll get there."

But better still than offering encouragement, Lonoff enacts a wonderfully poignant scene for Nathan to eavesdrop on (while standing on his host's desk atop a volume of Henry James' short stories with his ear pressed to the ceiling), in which Lonoff rejects the amorous overtures of a former student who has been sorting his manuscripts. Out of this scene Nathan constructs an overwrought fiction in which the student turns out to be none other than Anne Frank, whom Nathan plans to marry and present to his family as proof of his ultimate loyalty to Jewry, and if this sounds comically extravagant, let it be said that as well as using the story within the story as an illustration of Nathan's pathetic confusion over his loyalties to art and family, Roth also makes of it — somehow — an eloquent response to the accusation that Nathan's fiction betrays his co-religionists, as well as a suitably grandiloquent backdrop to the deflating events that transpire over breakfast the following morning.

Now, it might conceivably be argued from a reading of The Ghost Writer that as Roth grows older he is simply recycling the obsessions of his youth — his rebellion against the role of nice Jewish boy he played in his childhood and adolescence (or that his fictional persona played, at any rate); his guilt over exercising his freedom as an artist; and his insistence on the right to imagine in his work the bad people as well as the good who happen to be Jewish. But never before, that I can recall, has he handled these materials so deftly. Never before has he defended so passionately his right to be a person, and not just a Jew, yet posed with almost equal force and sympathy the contending point of view that Jews can never afford to forget that they're Jews.

It could also be argued that the women in the novel, except for the fantasy figure of Anne Frank, are treated with the utmost condescension. Over breakfast in the morning, Hope Lonoff, the maestro's long-suffering wife, throws a tantrum because, among other things (not least of them the presence of the former student in the house) "I (even) have to catch my toast before it pops up so you won't be disturbed in the study?" and, not for the first time or the last (we are led to suspect), walks out.

But it is not Philip Roth who assumes that a woman's noblest calling is to be a handmaiden in the House of Art. It is young Zuckerman, still glowing over the "Rites of Confirmation" that have just been administered to him by Lonoff, who takes this attitude. Philip Roth himself remains James Joyce's ideal of the absent God of his creation, indifferently paring his nails . . . or ghost-writing.

University entries fall

CALGARY (CP) — The drop in young Albertans pursuing higher education is alarming, says Norman Wagner, University of Calgary president.

Wagner said enrolment at his campus of people in the 18- to 24-year-old bracket has dropped from 15 to 11 per cent of the age group in the province.

"In a booming province, that's disturbing," he said.

The "acute shortage of skilled professionals" in Alberta will mean importing trained personnel to get the job done well, he said.

Inventor Hoken Kristiansen shows off his K-Cycle engine

Winnipeg firm shows its quiet revolutionary

WINNIPEG (CP) — The annual meeting of K-Cycle Engines Ltd. featured a special demonstration: the novel design in internal combustion engines was used to power a compact model car.

The K-Cycle engine proved to be a quiet revolutionary. The crowd was hushed expectantly, but the only sound that showed the piston engine was running was a slight click when the motor was turned on.

The engine, installed in a standard American compact, had all cylinders purring so quietly that it had to be turned off and on, to prove the car hadn't been pushed in.

Hoken J. Kristiansen, company president and inventor of the K-Cycle engine, said the quietness demonstrated at the meeting this week is only one of the engine's attractive features.

He said major European and Japanies companies are interested in the efficiency of the engine, which has only one firing point—one spark plug—and a much longer power stroke than conventional internal combustion engines.

Kristiansen was invited by the U. S. government last February to take part in a conference in Boston that kicked off a research plan aimed at developing cars within the next two decades that can get up to 50 miles to a gallon of gasoline.

Rick Shand, K-Cycle engineering chief, said the invention has a "similar weight to power ratio as the turbine engine, with about a half to a third the weight, and a half to a third as many components as the conventional engine."

"There are no tappets, push rods or valve lifters, so there are less wearing parts and less noise," he said. The longer power stroke means the piston uses more of the power from the controlled gas explosion, and less energy goes out the exhaust.

The exhaust release is near atmospheric pressure, and there is so little noise that no muffler is needed. Shand said a K-Cycle type engine theoretically could be developed to power anything from a lawn mower to an airplane.

L. J. Sinnott, K-Cycle secretary-treasurer, said a vehicle producer with a worldwide dealership network is working on a production prototype of the engine that burns diesel fuel. Sinnott declined to name the company.

He said the local test car engine has a carburetor gasoline flow, while the European version is fuel-injected. The European version is expected to be ready for sale initially by 1982, and in some volume by 1985.

Sinnott said Pratt and Whitney, the U. S. airplane engine-maker, has expressed interest in the K-Cycle engine, and the giant Japanese conglomerate, Mitsubishi Corp., is involved in a royalties-sharing marketing agreement.

Convicts get own keys

EDMONTON (CP) — The new Edmonton Remand Centre will issue cell keys to some prisoners in a pilot project that may be the first of its kind in Canada.

George Fralick, remand centre director, said Sunday that distribution of the keys to minimum-risk prisoners will be introduced slowly.

The keys will be issued to young offenders, first offenders and people serving short sentences instead of paying fines, Fralick said. The centre is expected to begin receiving prisoners in two weeks.

"There may be some hue and cry (from the public), perhaps. But this is a remand centre. People are waiting to go to court. They're innocent until proven guilty."

Some of the prisoners to get keys might be working people who were picked up on a drunk driving charge and are unable, for one reason or another, to raise bail in the morning.

"It would be detrimental to treat these offenders the same as hardened criminals."

Young offenders are another group who should have the freedom to go to classrooms.

Prisoners issued keys will have to put up a $1 to $5 deposit when it is issued upon arrival. "We'd have all kinds of security problems if the keys aren't returned."

If a prisoner tries to escape from the building, or use the key as a weapon, "we have an override system if there is any problem."

Neighbors rally to widow's aid

DIDSBURY, Alta. (CP) — "Thank God for neighbors," said Suzie Collinge as she surveyed her harvested fields.

About 35 men with trucks and combines had just harvested in one day what it would normally take a farmer three weeks to finish.

A month ago, Mrs. Collinge's husband, Bob, was killed in a collision with a train, leaving behind his wife, three children and 750 acres of unharvested rapeseed and barley.

Albert Krebs, who organized the harvesting blitz, said he was amazed by the response.

"My name went out over the radio as organizing this thing and the calls just started coming in. It was just terrific."

Krebs said similar bees have been organized in this central-Alberta area before, but never on such a scale as Tuesday's effort.

Twenty-three combines scattered in batches across the farm and kept in touch by using citizen's band radios.

Most of the helpers were farmers who sacrificed a day of ideal harvesting weather. About a dozen others worked in Didsbury and took the day off.

"Sure a lot of the guys took time off work," said one helper during a break. "But you've got to do it — like they used to do in the old days."

Combines race first frost

WINNIPEG (CP) — A setting sun loses its splendor on the Prairies at this time of the year.

For farmers in Manitoba, the end of each day raises the possibility of a frost that can reduce yield and quality of already late-maturing crops.

"Everytime the sun sets you get a little closer to the edge," said Walter Mazinke of St. Jean, 80 kilometres south of Winnipeg.

"When you see your buckwheat field turn red overnight from barely a degree of frost, you know you are living on the edge. Tender buckwheat is the first to suffer but it is an early warning of serious damage in other crops not yet ripe."

Most crops in the province are two to four weeks late and farmers are using every available hour to work their fields. Frantic harvest activities cloud the sky with dust during the day and at night, powerful headlights from harvesting machinery pierce the darkness.

"A problem this late in the year is heavy dew that keeps you out of the fields until as late as 10 or 11 in the morning, so you have to keep going after sundown," said Allan Calder who farms with his father near Letellier at the south end of the Red River Valley.

"Some early morning threshed wheat will have to go through our dryer. We haven't worked all night yet because we have had a lot of help from a neighbor who is one of the few farmers in this area who is pretty well cleaned up already."

In contast, there is another neighbor who hasn't harvested a bushel of grain yet, he said. The valley area was one of the latest to seed crops last spring because of severe flooding.

"His will be really late and before he gets his crop off, everybody in this area will likely pitch in and help," said Calder.

"That's what usually happens when someone gets caught."

Al Martin, crops specialist with the Manitoba department of agriculture, said good progress was made in harvesting over the last week.

Martin estimated swathing is 40 to 50 per cent complete but only 15 to 20 per cent of threshing. Yields and quality are "pretty good generally" in the valley south of Winnipeg but in the west and northwest, drought and an early frost have hurt yields.

"Some rapeseed harvested around Roblin and Russell has averaged 15 bushels to the acre, about half of normal," he said.

But Martin said the Interlake district is harvesting fairly good crops in yield and quality. South of Portage la Prairie some special crops are yielding well but most are late.

He said more than 40 per cent of the buckwheat yield likely already has been lost to frost. Corn and sunflowers need two weeks of good weather to fully ripen.

A report issued Thursday by Manitoba Pool Elevators said a poll of elevator agents indicate yields vary greatly throughout the province.

The Prairies

No-sniff bylaw passed

WINNIPEG (CP) — City council has approved its first anti-sniff bylaw, a step intended to reduce glue sniffing by children.

The bylaw makes it an offence to sell or give certain toxic solvents to people under the age of 18. The solvents include a variety of glues and plastic cements, cleaning fluids and gasoline, cigarette lighter fluid and fingernail polish.

Pronghorns up

EDMONTON (CP) — Recently-completed surveys indicate an exceptional increase in Alberta's Pronghorn population, the fish and wildlife division of the Alberta energy and natural resources department said today.

"The population estimate for the province now approaches 16,000 and this large increase, 43 per cent, has almost restored the population to levels prior to the extensive losses of 1977-78 caused by severe winter conditions," it said.

First streetcar

EDMONTON (CP) — Old Faithful No. 1, the first streetcar to ever to rumble along city streets, will carry full passenger loads when it makes three days of trips across the North Saskatchewan River starting Oct. 6 as part of Edmonton's 75th birthday celebration.

About 4,000 tickets selling at a nickel apiece were sold within hours when they went on sale at selected banks this week.

Plebiscite set

CALGARY (CP) — A plebiscite on the $233.5 million Civic Centre project, forced by a citizens' group petition, is planned for Nov. 28.

The plebiscite was forced by a petition from a group called Human Action to Limit Taxes or HALT.

The cost of the project may be reduced to $226.6 million before the vote.

Hutterites battle zoning codes

SWIFT CURRENT, Sask. (CP) — The rural municipality of Whiska Creek is continuing its fight to force the Vanguard Hutterite Brethern to tear down more than $1-million worth of buildings at their southwestern Saskatchewan colony.

The municipality has launched an appeal in District Court to try to overturn a decision handed down in June in provincial court. Provincial Court Judge G. K. Fielding dismissed charges against the Hutterites of contravening zoning.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, September 23, 1979 By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get approval—in writing—for a special project. Creative resources are tested. You have opportunity for innovations, for change, variety, travel. Imprint style, but also permit partner or mate to talk about plans, ambitions. Spotlight "settles" on public relations, contracts, marriage.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Moderate pace "works" best—know it and act as if aware of it. Money picture is brighter than might be apparent on surface. Libra and another Taurus figure in scenario. You receive compliment on voice, powers of persuasion.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Maintain realistic attitude concerning emotional responses. One who whispers "sweet nothings" may have that to offer—nothing. Know it, act accordingly. Get property appraisal, avoid self-deception, dig deep for vital statistics.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get on more solid ground—sense of security is heightened. You get credit due for past efforts. Older individual could become a valuable ally. Capricorn and another Cancer native figure in your personal scenario.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You may be reaching too far, too soon. Means conserve energy, get emotional second wind, review procedures. Aries, Taurus, Libra persons figure prominently. Finish rather than begin; tie loose ends. Short trip may be necessary.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New approach could result in profit. Obtain hint from Leo message. Highlight originality, independence, willingness to get to heart of matters. You "locate" what had been misplaced or stolen. Check financial potential.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Follow through on hunch, give full rein to intuitive intellect. Cycle high—take initiative, make new starts, welcome opportunity to display talents. You can be at right place at crucial moment. Know it, be direct and confident.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You'll celebrate! Source of doubt, fear is removed. You have "more room" as result. Gemini, Sagittarius natives aid in providing laughter. Your position is strengthened. You gain accolade from one who had been a severe critic.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Accent on broadening experiences, emotional horizons. Study Scorpio message. Your popularity is on upswing—financial picture also grows brighter. Member of opposite sex expresses confidence—and love.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Emphasis on ambition, willingness to put views on record. Individual who is active, dynamic and dramatic suggests that you "team up." Survey facts, figures. Be practical, weigh available evidence. What had been misplaced will be located.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You settle "inner turmoil." Philosophical-spiritual concepts come into sharp, clear focus. Family, home, security, creative outlets, finding a profitable means of self-expression—these are featured. You are undergoing a transformation!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Find ways to define terms, to improve techniques, to be rid of the superfluous. Dig deep for "meaningful material." Steer away from schemes, transitory drams. One close to you has money questions. This need not be followed by a dispute.

IF SEPTEMBER 23 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, restless, idealistic, capable of getting points across in dramatic, graphic manner. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. In October, you will be "released" from numerous restrictions. You have been through a testing, trying time—you are due to emerge victorious. Know it, shake off emotional lethargy. The money situation is not as dark as you have painted it. You soon get "relief." In November, expect a family reunion. You are bright, attractive and, at times, devious. You are nobody's fool, but you are capable of deceiving yourself.

Astrological Forecast for Monday, September 24, 1979 By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Discuss budget with family. Arrive at decisions concerning sales or purchases. Be diplomatic, but protect your interests. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives figure prominently. One close to you confides dilemma. Be understanding, not weak.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Being cautious now is a necessity. Judgment, timing could be slightly off-center. Know it and wait for a more propitious moment. Examine legal ramifications, rights and permissions. See in realistic light. Avoid self-deception.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Taurus message for valid hint. Accent on pressure, responsibility, commitments made in recent past. Those who depend upon you may be making unreasonable demands. Know it and "fight back." The number 8 could figure prominently.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A search could end. You find what had been elusive, evanescent. Creativity, the imprinting of your own style, change, variety, travel opportunity and an intensified relationship are featured. You're due to be rid of a burden.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You learn truth about security, basic values and potential. Get to heart of matters, make new starts in new directions. Highlight independence, originality. Another Leo figures prominently. Older family member appears to oppose you, but secretly lends support.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You now are able to plug loophole which caused unnecessary extravagance. Learn by teaching. Follow through on hunch. Be versatile without scattering forces. You'll hear from relative in transit. Do not rush while dining.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Make calls, dispatch messages. Money picture becomes bright and shining. There is reason to celebrate. Gemini, Sagittarius natives figure in scenario. You get credit for unusual contribution to community project.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Puzzle pieces fall into place. Sense of direction returns—circumstances favor your efforts. Judgment, timing, hunches are on target. Lunar cycle high—you're on road to victory! Wear brighter colors, make personal appeals and appearances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): More persons comment on your "charisma." Changes work in your favor. You gain through written word. Express ideas in confident manner. What had been abstract now becomes strikingly clear. Look behind scenes for answers.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You perceive opportunity for change in lifestyle. Special accolade or gift comes your way. Debt is repaid. You "flirt" with the occult. Long-standing problem is resolved. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio and the number 6 figure in your personal scenario.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You're able now to streamline techniques. Refuse to be rushed into slipshod methods. Potential is too great to be marred by those who are envious and mediocre. One who pulls strings of authority tests your capabilities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): By opening lines of communication, you find the price is right. Aries, Cancer, Capricorn natives play key roles. Accent on language, publications and travel plans. One you thought was far away could surprise you. The number 8 figures prominently.

IF SEPTEMBER 24 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY recent changes prove beneficial. Cycle indicates decisions affecting close relationship are on target. Restrictions which led to confinement last year will be removed by the end of September. You are perceptive, creative, affectionate and your own worst critic. Members of opposite sex find you attractive, although it is not easy for you to accept compliments. You have compelling voice, a "sweet tooth" and people confide their intimate problems to you. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons play important roles in your life. In October, you could change residence, marry or receive financial windfall.

After Mackasey, are the Ostrys next?

By PAUL GESSELL

OTTAWA (CP) — Bryce Mackasey being fired as Air Canada board chairman has touched off a new wave of gossip on the public service cocktail circuit about other Liberal favorites expected to willingly or unwillingly leave senior jobs in the new Progressive Conservative government.

It appears that to be really on the inside of things these days is to know the fate of Bernard and Sylvia Ostry, the top mandarins who serve as king and queen of Ottawa's beautiful people.

Rightly or wrongly, the Ostrys are being labelled intimates of former prime minister Pierre Trudeau and, therefore, conventional wisdom has them fleeing Ottawa.

"With Mackasey gone, it now seems logical for the government to go after the Ostrys," says one highly-placed gossip.

Most departments have already experienced some top-level changes under the new government and the latest indication from the prime minister's office is that more changes are planned before Parliament opens Oct. 9.

The extent of the changes and who is involved have provoked considerable tongue-wagging during Parliament Hill coffee breaks.

For example, the Ostrys: Bernard is deputy communications minister and Sylvia is chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. But they are rumored to be resigning so they can jet off to Paris for jobs.

"As far as we know, there's nothing to the rumor," says one confidante of Bernard.

But a woman from Sylvia's circle confides: "Everyone knows that the Ostrys are going."

From the office of Roch LaSalle, supply and services minister, comes the rumor that other former Trudeau ministers who received plum appointments after leaving politics will soon be following Mackasey out of the boardrooms of the nation.

LaSalle, who unabashedly condones political patronage as long as it is Conservative, never hid his eagerness to be rid of Mackasey. He now is believed to be on the trail of Bud Drury, National Capital Commission chairman, and Mitchell Sharp, northern pipeline commissioner.

Tax program studies fan political fire

OTTAWA (CP) — Two studies prepared for the Canadian Tax Foundation are expected to fuel the political fires kindled by Progressive Conservative promise of relief from mortgage interest and property taxes.

One study highlights the different tax treatment given two groups of homeowners — those with mortgages and those who own their homes outright.

The other focuses on how various tax breaks reduce federal tax revenue and projects the cost of the government's proposals for home-owner tax credits.

Foundation director Douglas J. Sherbaniuk outlined the general conclusions of the studies in an interview this week.

Carl S. Shoup, professor emeritus of political economy at Columbia University, examined the concept of mortgage interest deductibility, the Conservative election pledge that has become a somewhat similar system of tax credits.

He decided it was impossible to give equal tax breaks to renters, homeowners with mortgages and homeowners without mortgages. The fairest option was to allow those with mortgages to deduct interest payments from their taxable incomes.

Renters would not benefit from deductibility, but the two groups of home-owners would get more or less the same tax treatment.

Shoup cited two individuals with $200,000 in investments who buy homes for $80,000. One pays cash and, although the other takes a mortgage, he is not allowed to deduct the interest he pays from his taxable income.

The person who paid cash is left with investments of $120,000 which earn interest of 10 per cent or $12,000 a year, which is subject to income tax.

The person with the $80,000-mortgage still has his $200,000 portfolio, and he winds up being taxed on interest of $20,000 a year.

Both Liberals and New Democrats have criticized the latest Conservative mortgage interest and property tax plans, saying they provide no benefits to renters. Some government sources say a rent-subsidy program is needed to ward off a major confrontation in the Commons.

The second study, by Prof. Roger Smith of the University of Alberta economics department, looked at "tax expenditures" during 1975 and identified billions of dollars in revenue the federal government gives up because of tax breaks.

He estimated a $1.4 billion loss because homeowners pay no capital gains taxes when they sell their homes. Tax deductions for those who buy registered retirement savings plans cost Ottawa another $442 million.

None of the tax expenditures listed, however, was as large as the $2.3 billion a year the Conservatives say their new tax credit plans will cost when in full force in 1982.

Sherbaniuk said the main question raised by Smith's study is whether the tax system is the best way to solve problems in housing or a variety of other fields.

Eroding the tax base by an additional $2.3 billion a year, he said, is an important consideration for a government that inherited a budget deficit of $11.3 billion.

Corning offers cash for faulty percolators

TORONTO (CP) — Corning Glass Works of Canada Ltd. will place advertisements in more than 200 Canadian newspapers advising owners of Corning electric and stove-top coffee percolators to stop using them because the handle may fall off without warning.

Richard Riley, general manager of Corning Canada, said the percolator owners will be offered cash for the depreciated value of the percolator, or other merchandise at substantial discounts or both cash and merchandise.

Riley described the offer as generous, saying it was enticing enough to encourage people to stop using the percolators.

He said 1.3 million percolators have been sold in Canada over the last 18 years.

Electronic newspaper on display

OTTAWA (CP) — Visitors to Canada's pavilion at an international communications exposition in Geneva this week will be able to read an electronic newspaper almost as soon as the news is placed on the wire in Montreal and Toronto.

The newspaper will be delivered on Telidon, a two-way television device, and the news will be supplied by Broadcast News, the broadcasting affiliate of The Canadian Press, and Nouvelles Tele-Radio of Montreal, the French-language affiliate of Broadcast News.

The electronic newspaper will have up-to-the-minute news, weather and sports delivered on four Telidon-equipped television sets.

The exposition, called Telecom '79, is sponsored by the Internatvonal Telecommunications Union

Weddings

Snider — Clifton

Christ Church Cathedral, Victoria, B.C., was the scene of a lovely double ring ceremony, on July 21, 1979, at 2 p.m., when Karen Marcella Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keith Coleman Clifton, of Victoria, B.C., became the bride of David Alan Snider, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Edward Snider, of Exeter, Ontario.

Reverend R. C. Crawley officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was radiant, in a floor length gown of chantilly lace over taffeta. The fitted bodice rose to an Elizabethan neckline and the bishop sleeves, ending in lace, were held with tiny pearl buttons.

The full skirt, falling softly over a hoop, was lavishly trimmed with tiers of chantilly lace, that ended in an elegant train. Her fingertip veil of silk illusion tulle, misted from a capulet of lace, patterned with pearls and sequins.

She carried a bouquet of red and pink roses, with pink carnations and white baby's breath, tied with a white satin ribbon that cascaded with pink rosebuds.

Attending the bride was her sister Rita Clifton, maid of honour; and Sheila Snider, sister of the groom, senior bridesmaid.

They were attired in identical, floor length gowns of peppermint green nylon, fashioned in a slim, empire style and accented with pink rosebuds and matching picture hats.

They carried bouquets of pink sweetheart roses, and white carnations.

Also attending were Deborah and Liza Abelman, nieces of the bride, as junior bridesmaids. Both were attired in pink Swiss lace dresses and wore headbands of pink roses.

The little flower girl was Nancy Anne Bliss, niece of the bride. She was captivating in a floor-length gown of rose Swiss with a lace coat.

All carried nosegays of white carnations centered with pink sweetheart roses.

The mother of the bride wore a pale lilac sheath dress with an overlay of pale blue and lilac print sheer, and accented with white accessories.

A corsage of pink roses completed the ensemble.

The mother of the groom chose a slim dress of mulberry and pink chiffon over pink taffeta, complimented by white accessories. She wore a corsage of pink roses.

Mr. Robert Jolly attended the groom as best man; and ushers were Sylvian Allaire, Dale Clifton and Charles Snider. Darren Abelman was the ringbearer.

Traditional wedding music accompanied the ceremony. A beautiful garden reception was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roland Young of Oak Bay; and a lovely buffet was enjoyed by family and friends.

After the reception, the young couple left on a trip to the Gulf Islands.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Snider of Exeter, Ontario; Sheila, Ruth and Charles Snider, Jr. also of Exeter. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Abelman and family of Port Renfrew, B.C. Mr. and Mrs. Brian Bliss and family of Edson, Alberta and Mr. Robert Jolly of Exeter, Ontario.

A special thanks to Mrs. Alex Dobbie and Janice and Roland, also Donna and Susan, and all our friends.

Munsell — Mei

St. Peter's Anglican Church was the scene of an afternoon wedding on September 15, when Susan Mei became the bride of Donald Munsell. Reverend John Murray performed the ceremony uniting the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mei and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Munsell, all of Duncan, B.C.

Following a reception at Wilcuma the couple travelled to Prince Rupert where they will reside.

Martin — Cheston

A double ring ceremony was held on July 7, 1979 at 7:00 p.m. in Esquimalt United Church when Sandra Jean Cheston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Cheston and Richard George Martin, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Martin, exchanged wedding vows. Reverend Phil Ross officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a full length gown of peau de sore with lace gores and trim and a full length train with lace trim. The bride carried a bouquet of apricot gladiolas with carnation centres accented by heather and baby's breath. The bride was attended by maid of honor Donna Cheston, sister of the bride and bridesmaids, Lorna Litwen and Myrna Cable, sister of the bride. They wore identical apricot dresses and carried bouquets of white and yellow daisies. The groom and attendants wore camel suits with brown trimmed shirts. The groom was attended by best man, Steve Beggs and ushers, Ken Martin, brother of the groom and Ed Knutson.

A reception was held at Gordon Head Rec Centre, where Mr. Innis was M.C. and Mr. Stan Cheston, uncle of the bride gave the toast.

After a honeymoon in Florida and the Carribean the couple are residing in Victoria.

Glover — Bird

On January 20, 1979 at 6:00 p.m. in Queenswood Chapel, Father Leo Roberts officiated at a double-ring ceremony between Susan Marie, youngest daughter of Bob and Ruth Bird and Andrew Daniel, son of Jack and Tony Glover, all of Victoria.

Susan was given in marriage by her father. She was attended by her sister, Joanne Bird as maid of honour, her sister Linda Chatton and friend Susan Johnstone were bridesmaids. Best man was Rob Scrimes, the groom's brother Guy Glover and friend Dennis Wright were ushers.

Andy and Susan Glover are now residing in Victoria.

MacDonald — Hatch

Mr. and Mrs. G. Hatch are pleased to announce the marriage of their daughter, Wendy Dianne, to Lindsay James, son of Mr. and Mrs. MacDonald.

The wedding took place on Friday, September 14, 1979 in Vancouver, B.C.

Martman — Pratt

Reverend and Mrs. Pratt are pleased to announce the marriage of their daughter, Susanne, to Ronald John Martman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Martman of Sidney, B.C.

309 IN MEMORIAM

CROSBY - Betty G. passed away September 22, 1978
God saw the road was getting rough and the hills were hard to climb so he closed your weary eyes and Whispered "Peace be thine."
Sadly missed by all her family

DALEY - In loving memory of our son Gordon. Passed away September 22, 1964.
Just a prayer from ones who loved you,
A precious memory kind and true,
In our hearts you live forever,
Because we thought the world of you.
If tears could make a stairway,
And heartache make a lane,
We would walk a path to heaven,
And bring you home again.
Sadly missed by Mum - Dad.

FRENCH - In loving memory of my dear husband Frank, who passed away September 23, 1972.
The longest years of my life have past,
But the lovely memories will always last.
Always remembered by his loving wife Jessie.

TURNEY — In memory of our loving father and husband, Robert L. Turney.
Our family chain has been broken
A link from it's chain stolen
But in our hearts you are there to stay.
If we could have one wish come true, to be,
See and talk to you
But God took you at his command.
One day we will all be on his demand.
—Always remembered by loving wife and four children.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

IN THE MATTER OF THE PROTECTION OF CHILDREN ACT
R.S.B.C. 1960 — Chapter 303, and Amendments thereto and
IN THE MATTER OF THE CHILDREN
Sharon Jack, Sandra Jack
NOTICE OF SUBSEQUENT HEARING
TO: Joyce Smith of 92 Etiene, Brentwood, B.C.
Take notice that on the 27th day of September, 1979, at 9:30 o'clock in the forenoon, a hearing will take place at the Provincial Court at 2020 Cameron Street, Victoria, British Columbia, to review the Order made by Judge L. C. Brahan on 26/7/79, under the Protection of Children Act at which time, the children Sharon Jack, born 24/05/69, and Sandra Jack, born 14/08/70, were returned to their parents . . . subject to inspection and supervision by the Superintendent and such order to be reviewed in this court on the 27th of September, 1979."
And further take notice that if the Judge finds the said children are still in need of protection he may make an order under Section 8(9) (a):
(i) That the children be returned to their parent or other person having actual custody at the time of apprehension subject to inspection and supervision by the Superintendent for a period not exceeding twelve months; or
(ii) That the children be committed temporarily to the care and custody of the Superintendent for a period not exceeding twelve months as in the circumstances of the case he considers advisable; or
(iii) Subject as hereinafter provided that the children be committed permanently to the care and custody of the Superintendent.
And further take notice that at this hearing the Superintendent will recommend that:
(a) a further order be made under Section 8(9) (a) (k), for a period not exceeding twelve months, or (b) that no further order be made, or
(c) that the existing order be terminated.

Mountain men were motley crew

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — It was a motley group of tough frontiersmen mixed with the black sheep of English families who took the first tourists and businessmen into the Rocky Mountains.

But their contributions have largely been overlooked — a matter that Ted Hart, head of the Archives of the Canadian Rockies, says he hopes to remedy with a new book called Diamond Hitch. (The hitch refers to a popular method of tying down a pack on a horse.)

Hart says he became interested in early local guides after reading brief mentions of them in journals written by their clients.

"They (the clients) would get the credit for finding a new peak or valley but they'd rarely mention the people who got them there. . . .

"I really like characters and these guys were characters.

One of them, Tom Lusk, had spent years tending cattle in Texas before heading north to Morley, Alta., reportedly with someone else's herd of cattle and a sheriff on his trail, Hart writes in his book.

Another guide, Bill Peyto, led expeditions to Mt. Assiniboine and other remote areas but his daily life sometimes outshone his wilderness exploits.

Peyto walked into a bar in Banff one day into the company of some miners he didn't particularly like. He took pleasure at their response when he untied a lively and very upset lynx in their midst.

On another day, he and a companion were heading up to one of his remote prospecting cabins. Before walking into it, Peyto tossed rocks inside until he heard the clang of a bear trap springing shut.

He explained that he suspected a Banff trapper had been stealing his food. When his companion pointed out that had Peyto entered the cabin he would surely have been killed, Peyto replied, "You're damned right, then I would have known for sure it was him."

Then there was the black sheep of a distinguished English family, Jimmy Simpson, who was sent to work on a farm near Winnipeg after a poaching incident and some disputed behavior in a church.

He spent most of his money on drink and ended up taking a job on the CPR. That life didn't suit him and he drifted to San Francisco, where he ended up joining Jack London's hobo protest march in Washington.

After a career as a sailor, he came to Banff and built a reputation as one of the best hunting guides in the business.

Simpson still holds the record for the largest ram's head ever taken in the sheep country, a trophy that hangs to this day in the New York Museum of Natural History. He didn't appear to have changed his ways much. He shot the animal two days after hunting season ended.

UIC computer on prowl here

VANCOUVER (CP) — Unemployment insurance investigators, using a computer as bloodhound, are tracking down $7.8 million in overpayments collected by British Columbia and Yukon residents.

They expect to get back more than 95 per cent of the money.

Bert Watson, spokesman for the federal employment and immigration commission, said the overpayments come from 22,500 claims and represent about 2.5 per cent of the total benefits paid during the first seven months this year.

He said the success rate on collecting overpayments has been 95 to 96 per cent during the last three years.

Lorne Hanson, manager of Vancouver area operations, said Friday that the most common causes for overpayments are claimants who fill out forms improperly and employers whose records are inaccurate or doctored.

He said that 3,500 abuse cases were settled out of court with claimants required to return the overpayments plus penalties of up to three times the amount overpaid. Total penalties imposed were $474,321.

An additional 103 claimants were taken to court; 96 were convicted, netting $32,320 in fines.

Hanson declined to describe exactly how the computer is used, but said it identifies groups of people most likely to abuse the insurance program by such factors as occupation or address.

Fire school bus drivers or kids don't go - parents

PORT MELLON (CP) — Parents said Friday they will not allow their children to go back to school Monday unless two district school bus drivers are fired this weekend.

"We had a meeting with the school trustee and we told him that our kids would be kept out of school unless the drivers are fired no later than Sunday," said Sharon Astle, president of the Port Mellon community association.

Thirty-three children were kept out of school Friday to protest what their parents said is unsafe school bus service.

Ms. Astle said students are taken by bus either to the elementary school in Langdale or to the high school in Gibsons, both about 12 kilometres away. On the way home, students from this south coast mill town are often dropped off before their destinations and walk along a narrow mountain road with no shoulders and many blind curves.

"Two days before the end of school last year, there was an incident where a 14-year-old boy was the last one on the bus," said Ms. Astle. "The driver was too lazy to drive him the last three miles, so he stopped and asked a complete stranger to drive the boy the rest of the way home."

The situation came to a head Tuesday when about 20 students, all but two of them under 10 years of age, were let off at a detour where construction crews were changing shifts and live power lines were down.

The children had to walk unsupervised through the site, said Ms. Astle.

"This situation has been going on for 12 years and now something is going to be done about it."

A meeting with local MLA Don Lockstead was scheduled for today, and the school board chairman has scheduled a meeting for Tuesday.

95% raise settles strike

VANCOUVER (CP) — Truck drivers and warehousemen working for a Vancouver area electrical supply company have returned to their jobs after a four-week strike with a settlement which will give them a 95-per-cent wage hike by the end of next year.

Employees of Henry Electric Ltd., most of whom earned $4 an hour before the strike, will have their pay increased to $7.80 an hour by Dec. 31, 1981.

Ed MacIntosh, business agent for Teamsters Local 351, said the new contract is retroactive to June 6 and expires Dec. 31, 1981.

Under the old contract, 11 of the 15 workers earned $4 an hour, three made between $4.20 and $4.90, and one employee of six years got $7 an hour.

MacIntosh said the union feels it is half way toward its wage goal and will seek another substantial increase in the next set of negotiations.

Pneumonia shots in great demand

More and more Victorians are asking for pneumonia vaccine, a spokesman for McGill & Orme said Friday.

Most customers are older people with chronic heart or lung ailments, according to Evelyn Robinson.

Pneumovax was introduced in February and provides three to five years protection against some common strains of bacteria that cause pneumonia.

A second pnuemonia vaccine introduced in New York last week isn't offered here yet, said Robinson, who manages the pharmaceutical company's main branch.

The new vaccine, called Pnu-Imune, has yet to be cleared through the food and drug branch of the Canadian health ministry.

It was developed in the U.S. and also provides immunity against some common pneumonia-causing bacteria.

The demand for Pneumovax is increasing as people realize it's effectiveness, Robinson said.

It costs $11.50 for one injection.

Pneumovax must be administered by syringe and McGill & Orme prefers customers have their doctor's consent.

However, the vaccine is not a prescription drug and can be sold over the counter.

McGeer rejects funds plea

Education Minister Pat McGeer has rejected a resolution by local governments calling for increased funding for education from the province.

The Union of B.C. Municipalities says the government should increase its share of education funding to more than 70 per cent from the current 58 per cent.

But McGeer said Friday an increase in the government's share would mean cutbacks in other areas.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said increasing the funds would force the government to raise taxes, and that school boards should be adjusting more to the declining enrolment in the school system.

Trustees 'still looking' for administration HQ

Greater Victoria School Board may decide at a meeting Monday to look elsewhere for a home for its administrative offices, chairman Carol Pickup said Friday.

Parents at Burnside Elementary are concerned about a proposal for the board to move its headquarters from the Paul Building on Foul Bay Road to a building across the street from the school.

Hilda Jack, chairman of the Parents Auxiliary, said relocation to the Cecelia Street site would create safety problems for students because it would bring 250 extra cars to the area. The move also would take a playing field from the school for parking.

Pickup said she does not favor the site across from Burnside. A second site at the old Mount Tolmie School would be preferable.

"The Tolmie School has to be upgraded anyway. No-one can use it until considerable money is spent on it anyway and it would be more central. But it's my feeling we're still looking," said Pickup.

The school board is being forced to vacate its Foul Bay Road location because Camosun College wants the property back.

Uranium cartel scrutinized

WASHINGTON (CP) — The Canadian-led uranium marketing cartel that propped up world uranium prices in the early 1970s is again coming under close scrutiny in U.S. courts, on Capitol Hill and in the media.

There are fresh allegations of Canadian threats if U.S. investigations into the cartel go too deeply, and a promise of renewed efforts to pry information about the cartel's activities from the Progressive Conservative government that took power in Ottawa last May.

But sources in Ottawa, and former Liberal government members who helped run the cartel between 1972 and 1974 along with France, South Africa, Australia and Britain, suggest the federal government may soon find reasons for keeping a 1976 secrecy order on cartel operations firmly in place.

The cartel was basically an agreement to set prices and divide markets for uranium sales among participating countries. It was set up in 1972 after the United States closed its borders to uranium imports and ended in 1975 when rising world energy prices made the cartel unnecessary.

Sinclair Stevens, now treasury board president but formerly leading parliamentary critic of the 1976 secrecy order when he was in the opposition, last week said he favored ending the secrecy. But he added he first had to check to see what commitments had been made to other countries.

Gulf Oil Corp., a participant through a Canadian subsidiary in the cartel, plans to ask Ottawa to release documents about its role in the cartel.

In Washington, journalist Jack Anderson claims he obtained U.S. justice department documents showing Canadian officials pressured the state department with threats of retaliation against the Alaska oil peipline if a justide department probe of the cartel resulted in criminal prosecution. There was no prosecution.

Marcos agrees to quit if better leader found

MANILA (UPI) — President Ferdinand Marcos Friday pledged for the first time to step down if Filipinos found a better leader. An opposition leader warned of civil war if he stayed in power.

The 62-year-old chief executive also vowed at ceremonies marking the seventh anniversary of his martial law declaration that such rule will continue for as long as the people want him to serve.

Marcos made the pledges in a nationally-televised speech marking the Sept. 21 1972 declaration of emergency.

As he spoke, the 200,000-strong-armed forces propping up his regime stood on alert throughout the country as a precaution against any possible insurgent strikes. Police described the martial law anniversary as a "politically sensitive" day.

By nightfall, no demonstration had been reported, but police said they found an incendiary bomb in a flowerpot at the Manila Rizal Park grandstand some 15 yards from where Marcos and his wife passed by in a car early today to wave at a crowd of government employees.

The device, consisting of two gasoline bottles with an alarm clock and trigger mechanisms timed to explode at 7 p.m., was found three hours after the Marcoses drove by, police said.

Marcos vowed to continue with his "new society," a government slogan for martial law, through the mandates he secured in a series of referendums held after the martial law began.

He added however: "It is a weak leader who will impose his leadership upon the people when the people no longer want him. If you find a better leader than me, by all means let us get him. I will work with him."

He emphasized he would continue to rule "so long as the mandate continues."

Former President Diosdado Macapagal, a staunch Marcos critic facing inciting to sedition charges, said today Marcos must hold elections now "if civil war is to be averted."

Assailing U.S. support for the Marcos government, Macapagal said "the Carter administration has again bet on the wrong horse . . . as it did in the case of the Shah of Iran and Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua."

Angola appoints new president

LISBON (AP) — Planning Minister Jose Eduardo dos Santos has been named president of Angola to succeed Agostinho Neto, who died last week, Portugal's national news agency ANOP reported.

The report, quoting the Angolan national news agency ANGOP, said Dos Santos was chosen at a meeting of the Central Committee of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, the Marxist party that governs the southern African state.

Neto left Dos Santos in charge of the government earlier this month before leaving for Moscow, where he died Sept. 10 after undergoing cancer surgery.

Dos Santos' selection by the 75-member committee appeared aimed at heading off a possible power struggle within the government and MPLA.

4 MDs probed for drug Rx

By DEREK SIDENIUS

The B.C. College of Physicians and Surgeons is investigating four doctors suspected of handing out narcotic drug prescriptions to known addicts, in some cases in return for cash and other favors.

College registrar Dr. John Hutchison of Vancouver said Friday the number of doctors engaged in the illegal practice is extremely low, but some pharmacists and police officials feel it represents only the tip of the iceberg.

One local pharmacist estimated as many as six doctors in the Greater Victoria area alone are issuing prescriptions knowing full well the drugs aren't being used for medical purposes.

One Victoria addict said in an interview it was easy to get drug prescriptions filled.

She said that early this summer she was able to get 240 valium pills a week and all the narcotic-based cough syrup she needed to support her habit by going to one or two doctors in the area.

"We all know who they are," she said. "They'll give us whatever we want without any questions asked."

She said she knows of one doctor who has accepted sexual favors from a patient in exchange for prescriptions.

Hutchison agreed such exchanges do happen and that there may be some under the table pay-offs.

"I am sure they exist," he said, adding it is almost impossible to prove.

"Doctors are no different from anyone else. A few are weak. They allow themselves to get caught as easy marks. They just aren't tough enough."

A Greater Victoria police drug squad officer said that once a doctor gets the reputation of an easy mark he's in for a rough time.

He said he knows three doctors in the area who have got themselves in such a bind that they fear reprisals if they don't continue to meet their addict patients' demands.

"They come to me and say they don't know what to do."

B.C. gung-ho to drill

British Columbia would like to resume offshore exploratory drilling for oil right away, if environmental concerns can be satisfied, deputy energy minister James Fyles said today.

"We are eager to find out what's out there."

His statement follows an historic announcement in Vancouver Friday by Prime Minister Joe Clark that Ottawa will transfer control of all offshore oil and mineral rights to the province.

Details of the transfer have yet to be negotiated.

The decision cancels the policy of the former Liberal government that Ottawa had a right to 25 per cent of all offshore wealth.

Clark's announcement was no surprise, however, as similar agreements had been negotiatedwith Nova Scotia and Newfoundland earlier this week.

Among issues still outstanding is a 10-year moratorium on B.C. offshore drilling imposed by Ottawa in 1972.

B.C. wants the moratorium ended immediately.

Clark said native Indian rights must also be fully protected in any general settlement about offshore exploration. Clark had met with a representative of the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs in Vancouver before meeting Bennett.

Fyles said two steps would have to precede the resumption of offshore drilling. Ottawa would have to end the moratorium and oil companies would have to satisfy the province that there are no environmental hazards.

He said Chevron in particular is interested in resuming exploration off B.C.'s coast.

Oil exploration so far has resulted only in dry holes but there is some promise of undersea mining if the technology is developed.

From Ottawa's viewpoint, the outstanding issues include the environment, international implications and Indian aboriginal rights.

Said Clark: "They (Indian rights) may not arise directly from the negotiations but we have an obligation as the federal authority to ensure that the rights of native people are protected in any negotiations where those rights might be legitimate."

Premier Bennett said there were a number of issues to be settled before control was passed to the provincial government but the meeting with Clark was a good start. Among issues left hanging is the status of offshore exploration permits issued by the federal government.

The 10-year moratorium was imposed to allow an environmental study.

Clark defended his tactic of reaching agreements in principle in private talks with premiers rather than waiting to raise the issue when Parliament opens.

"This type of discussion and policy was discussed at length in the most basic of our democratic institutions — the national election campaign."

Exploration for oil off B.C.'s coast has been less promising than off the Altantic coast where there were reports this week of potential oil finds.

In the 1960s, Shell Canada drilled 14 dry holes off the Queen Charlotte Islands and there has been little drilling activity since.

Mineral rights offer some potential long-term benefits, particularly in sea-bottom managanese nodules which also contain nickel, copper and cobalt.

Clark reiterated his concern about the danger of oil tanker traffic on the West Coast and sided with Bennett that B.C. and Canada should indicate to the United States a strong preference for the Foothills pipeline route.

Foothills Oil Pipe Lines Ltd. has proposed an overland pipeline to Alberta from Alaska to transport oil to the lower 48 states. Two other consortiums propose oil tankers carrying Alaskan crude down the Pacific Coast.

WRECKERS STRUGGLED to right fully-loaded cement truck that didn't quite make the turn on the southbound ramp off Pat Bay Highway at the Quadra Street interchange Friday afternoon. Driver Bradley Dutemple, 19, of 219-7840 Lochside, escaped with minor cuts in the 4 p.m. mishap. The owner of the truck, Beacon Ready-Mix of Sidney, got the shock. The truck, valued at $70,000, was a write-off.

No more bikini shots

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Miami Beach tourism authority has ordered its staff photographer to stop snapping promotional shots of women in bikinis, calling the practice "out of style."

Officials are also concerned that the daily cheesecake shots are not consistent with the city's support for the National Organization for Women, which has imposed an economic boycott on Florida and other states that have not ratified the federal Equal Rights Amendment.

Ted Griffin, executive director of the tourism authority, said he wants the photographers to concentrate instead on "a more action and situation-oriented, visitor-type photographic essay format."

Losses to the resort city have been estimated at $13 million during the last two years because of the NOW boycott. But Griffin insists that he has not been pressured by NOW or other pro-ERA forces to cut out the cheesecake shots.

Elderly and single parents need help on rent - report

OTTAWA (CP) — A confidential report to the Clark cabinet says half the elderly renters and half the single-parent families need help to pay the rent each month.

The report says these people, now paying out more than 25 per cent of their monthly income for rent, would be major beneficiaries of a shelter allowance program, in effect a monthly rental subsidy for those with low incomes.

It recommends a shelter allowance be coupled with the homeowner assistance plan unveiled earlier this week by Finance Minister John Crosbie.

The Crosbie plan would would pay up to $1,500 in tax refunds for mortgage interest and property tax payments when it is fully implemented in 1982. But when the plan was released Monday, it contained nothing for renters.

Government sources said Thursday the annual price tag for a shelter allowance plan for homeowners now is set at about $750 million. That is about one-third of the $2,3-billion annual cost estimated for the homeowner plan when it is fully implemented in 1982.

Liberal housing critic Lloyd Axworthy released portions of the confidential report Friday following the earlier disclosures about the cost of the rental assistance plan.

"What this demonstrates is that the Conservatives are ignoring the figures on real housing need that are being presented to them," said Axworthy, newly-elected MP for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

"They are ignoring the reality."

Most of approximately 5.5 million homeowners would benefit from the $250 annual tax credit for property taxes under the Crosbie plan. But only the half who hold unpaid mortgages would be eligible for the tax credit of up to $1,250 for mortgage interest payments.

The report released by Axworthy says the following groups would benefit.

—About 237,000 senior citizen (over 65) households or about 50 per cent of those renting in the private market.

—About 80,000 single-parent families, or about half those who rent in the private market.

—About 60,000 families without children or about 14 per cent of those in this category who rent.

—About 17 per cent of families with children who rent or about 105,000 families.

Rentalsman's power restored

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal has restored the rentalsman's power to terminate tenancies.

In a written decision Friday, Mr. Justice J. D. Lambert upset a county court ruling that a section of the Residential Tenancy Act was unconstitutional and a rentalsman's order terminating a tenancy was made without jurisdiction.

The appeal court's decision also restored the termination order.

The landlord had applied to the rentalsman for an order to terminate the tenancy and specify the date the landlord could take possession.

A rentalsman officer heard the application Dec. 22, 1978, then made an order terminating the tenancy Dec. 31 and specifying Jan. 1 as the date the landlord could take possession.

The tenant filed notice of review, and County Court Judge J. C. Cowan decided that the section of the act used was unconstitutional, so the rentalsman's order was made without jurisdiction.

In the constitutional argument, it was claimed that the act gave the rentalsman the powers of a federally-appointed judge.

Mr. Justice Lambert ruled that the rights and obligations given the rentalsman are new statuatory rights and obligations established by the act, and that the section of the act in dispute does not make the rentalsman, in the exercise of that function, a tribunal, analagous to a superior, district or county court.

Bobby Hull cleared in family fight

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Bobby Hull, the "Golden Jet" who once threatened to quit hockey if the game's violence was not toned down, was found not guilty of common assault causing bodily harm in provincial court Friday.

Hull admitted in court that he broke down the door of his separated wife's house here in an attempt to see his children last year.

Joanne Hull, who has been separated from her husband for two years and is seeking a divorce, charged that Hull, 40, struck her with a piece of the door.

Judge J. D. Layton, in dismissing the charge after a two-hour trial, said the case involved child custody and he said he has found "that parents often exaggerate."

Court was told that a Manitoba court order gave custody of the couple's five children to Mrs. Hull. The order makes no provisions for visiting rights for Hull.

Mrs. Hull testified that her husband followed her to her home here last Dec. 9 following a junior hockey game in which their son Brett was playing.

She entered the home and locked the door but, seconds later, Hull knocked down the locked door, breaking it into two pieces, she said.

"With that, the door come splintering in, crashed in. He stood in the kitchen, screaming and yelling."

Mrs. Hull said she bent down to remove a piece of door from a potted plant.

"Robert Marvin Hull pulled it out of my hand. Seconds later he picked it up and hit me."

She said she called police, then had to go to the hospital for treatment of cuts to her shoulder, wrist and hand.

The piece of door — about 2.7 metres long, a third of a metre wide and four centimetres thick — was entered as evidence as were pictures of Mrs. Hull's wounds.

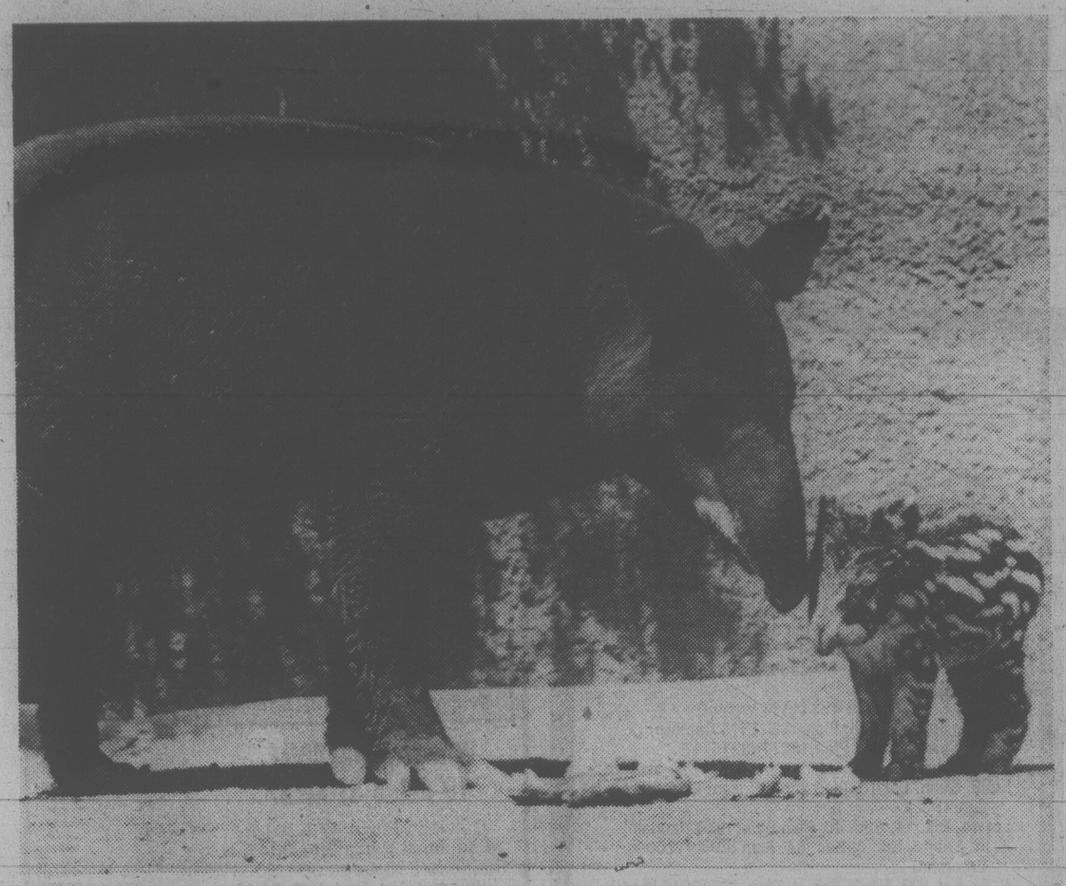
An RCMP constable who arrived at the home minutes after the incident told the court that Hull denied breaking down the door. However Hull admitted breaking the door down and called the policeman a liar.

"I wanted to see the two (younger children)," Hull testified. "I didn't come all the way to Vancouver not to see the children, and I felt that kids might have been in the house.

"So I stepped back and broke the door down. The door was splintered and I walked in and asked to see the kids.

"She picked the piece of wood up that she's talking about and took a swing at me and I brushed it aside. That's the only time I touched it. She then ran screaming and yelling to the telephone to phone the Mounties to bring their guns."

Asked how his wife was injured, Hull said: "They look like (finger) nail marks to me. I in no way inflicted those."



NEW ZOO ARRIVAL in Los Angeles, is a two-week-old female mountain tapir, which is seen being muzzled by its proud mother. Zoo director Dr. Warren Thomas said the youngster looked like "a furry brown and white watermelon". Mountain tapirs, related to the horse and rhinoceros, are natives of the Andes.

So you want fruit trees: Better read this first

GARDENING
Jack Beastall

You already know all the good reasons for planting fruit trees in your garden. The matter has been thoroughly discussed with the family. The kinds of fruits you would like to grow have been decided and the planting is to be done this fall.

The reason you called me was to know if one variety is any better than another, and to make sure that planting this fall is an acceptable practice.

You told me you wanted an apple, a pear, a peach, a plum and a cherry. The peach was to go against the house wall, the other four trees against the fences with table and chairs under them for a shady pace to sit in summer.

After a few minutes conversation I understood your basic plan, but felt that several points had not occurred to you, points requiring serious consideration before you go too far.

One apple tree is good, but two apples, one early for immediate use and one late variety for keeping over Christmas, are much better, and if you want good crops be sure to buy two trees, not two varieties on one tree.

The peach tree against the wall is fine providing the roots are set at least three feet out from the foundation, not in a narrow space between the foundation and a walk. The foundation must be waterproofed because a peach needs quantities of water at the roots to produce good fruit.

The curl disease of peach leaves is something we cannot avoid in our damp and chilly coastal springs. If you are going to try fighting it by spraying in August and December you will have to spray the back of the limbs against the wall as well as the front. You might do better to set it in the open where spraying is easier and can be properly done all over.

One each of pear, cherry and plum won't work. These trees must have two different but compatible varieties in close proximity to produce a reasonable crop. This means six trees instead of three. Have you room in the garden for eight trees, or nine if you have two apples?

The minimum planting distance for semi-dwarf fruit trees is 25 feet in all directions. This distance is considered essential for sufficient light and air to reach each tree for good crops and for limiting fungus deseases.

Your idea of planting along the fence lines is not good. Fruit trees should be planted a minimum of 15 feet from all property lines so that pruning, spraying and picking can be done from your own property. This rule avoids future arguments as to your neighbor's rights to cut off roots, branches, or to pick fruit on those parts of the trees which invade their property.

The idea of chairs and tables under the trees presupposes a beautiful stretch of grass. Ideal if you can find a solution to one problem.

Week's Work

Wallflowers and other biennials, transplanted in early July, need putting into flowering positions now while soil is warm enough to re-establish quickly.

Daffodils for winter bloom indoors — pot the top size of early varieties. Root in slightly dampened cool soil outdoors. Cover pots with loose soil for eight weeks; or in unheated crawl space.

Gather filberts from branches when rich brown. Look for others among leaves on ground. They become mouldy if left a few hours. Dry on shallow trays in sun before storage for winter.

Beets, turnips, carrots that are full size can be lifted for storage in cool place in dry sand to exclude air. Use smaller sizes freely while at best. Don't allow waste of good food in the garden.

Weed carefully those late vegetable sowings to give full chance for growth.

As gladioli finish bloom and leaves mature to brown, be ready to lift corms for winter storage.

Cut faded flower stems from Michaelmas daisies promptly to get more color from side branches, into October on some varieties.

Fruit trees are fertilized once only, in late February. Any fertilizer reaching the roots later in the season has an adverse effect on the keeping qualities of the fruits, and encourages rank growth the next season and less fruit.

Grass must receive three applications of a complete grass fertilizer and three applications of sulphate of ammonia between the first of April and Labor Day, plus far more water than required by fruit trees. You can have good fruit and no grass near, or good grass and a veritable forest of trees with little fruit.

Now a look at the trees themselves. Those on semi-dwarfing root stocks (apples and pears) go to a height of around 15 feet with a spread of 20 feet when fully grown.

Cherries produce fruit on new wood, not fruit spurs, and cannot be severely pruned without damaging the trees. They go higher each year and the fruit is soon beyond reach. Birds peck the fruits before they are ripe to obtain thirst quenching juices.

Plums bear on fruiting spurs which last about 5 years. New wood is encouraged each year to supply replacement spurs. Severe pruning to limit height causes bark splitting and the eventual death of the tree. When a dead plum tree is cut down sucker growths appear in abundance from the underground roots. Only root removal will remedy the trouble.

During winter, apples will stand a few days of surface water providing it drains quickly when the rain stops. Pear roots are more easily damaged and will not tolerate surface water or too high an underground water table.

All stone fruits need well drained soil, preferably sloping ground for perfect winter drainage, and they require dressings of lime to keep them in good condition.

What will be the effect of fruit trees on plants already growing in the garden?

Flowering plants, shrubs, certain grasses and conifers, will not do well in shade cast by fruit trees, nor in a soil that is laced with fruit tree roots. Acid-loving plants will not thrive near soil limed for stone fruits. No fertilizer can be given nearby plants, nor heavy watering, because of damage to fruits and excessive growth on the trees.

As to varieties, if you are going to sacrifice a mixed garden for a fruit orchard, pass up the well known commercial varieties and grow those of highest quality, the delicious varieties too delicate for shipping therefore never seen in the market.

These varieties are available from local nurseries which specialize only in fruit trees. Because home gardeners do not know the names of these varieties the demand in not great and stocks are always limited. They are only dug to order, so place your order immediately.

In the meantime, prepare the planting holes while the soil is dry and workable, also six-foot stakes, one or more for each tree, the number required depending on the exposure of the garden to wind. Sufficient ties will be needed, made from soft wire threaded through 10-inch lengths of old garden hose. The stakes are set in the holes before planting.

With everything ready, the holes dug and the stakes in place, planting will be an easy and pleasurable job.

The final decision on whether it would be feasible to grow fruit trees in your garden, the number of kinds of fruits to include, and the number of trees the property can reasonably hold, must be yours.

Your ability to study and master the art of fruit tree pruning is another fact which will determine whether or not you can succeed with fruit trees.

Careful consideration of the points mentioned here should help you make a wise decision, and prevent making the mistakes many local gardeners have made; also the problems they are now trying to solve.

GEMWISE

BY KEN DAVIDGE C. G.
MEMBER AMERICAN GEM SOCIETY

SAPPHIRES American Style

Did you know that the largest proven sapphire deposit in the world is located in the State of Montana in the U.S.A.? The mine in Yogo Gulch extends for five miles and is becoming a major producer.

The Yogo Gulch deposit was first discovered by accident in the 1890's. A group of miners happened upon it in their search for gold, at first mistaking the gem crystals for broken bits of glass.

The mine was successfully worked for 30 years and then shut down. It was not until 1977 that serious mining was resumed. About 70,000 tons of rock have been processed since then.

The Yogo deposit is the only one which is still in its place of formation. All other sapphire deposits are alluvial, that is, the gem material broke loose from its host rock through weathering, was washed away into rivers and streams, and was buried beneath sand and debris.

The American Gem Society recently presented to the Smithsonian Institution a collection of jewelry set with American gemstones. The collection was designed by Aldo Cipullo, a famous New York designer, and manufactured by top American Gem Society jewelry manufacturers plus a few friends of AGS. Of the 31 pieces in the collection, seven of them contain Montana sapphires.

The AGS American Gemstone Jewelry Collection will be touring the U.S.A. for two years. Hopefully, it will come to Canada so you can see these fine pieces. In the meantime, be sure to come into our store and see the lovely collection of sapphire jewelry we keep in stock.

HOMES TODAY

AN ADVERTISING SUPPLEMENT TO THE VICTORIA TIMES, SEPT. 21

Beacon Hill School is now a condominium

Sixty five years ago, the first class of children graduated from Beacon Hill School on Douglas Street. Today Beacon Hill School has become eight condominium homes, five of which have been sold to date.

In classrooms where children learned to write, and the drone of readin' and 'rithmetic filled the air, couples and single people are now living, with the aid of seven appliances to each home and modern heating and plumbing, in a far more comfortable environment than was ever dreamed of by the scholars of 1914.

The old classrooms had fourteen foot ceilings. Windows twelve feet high and rising were left full height. Ceilings slope down and back from them to allow two levels to be accomodated within the fourteen foot space: a loft over the bedroom, and a kitchen over a crawl space for storage. The loft space could be, and is, used as a bedroom, TV lounge, or studio, though it must be admitted, only by people who are not taller than five feet six.

"Originally, each home was priced in the sixty thousand bracket, but they are moving quickly now that the price has been lowered to $47,500," says Jim Webber of Town and Country Realty.

The brick feature walls and patios in the lowest level homes came from the original school, and was part of architect David Hambleton's plan to utilize what was possible of the old building to keep the spirit of the period.

This building received the award of merit for the sympathetic conversion of a heritage building from the Hallmark Society in 1979.

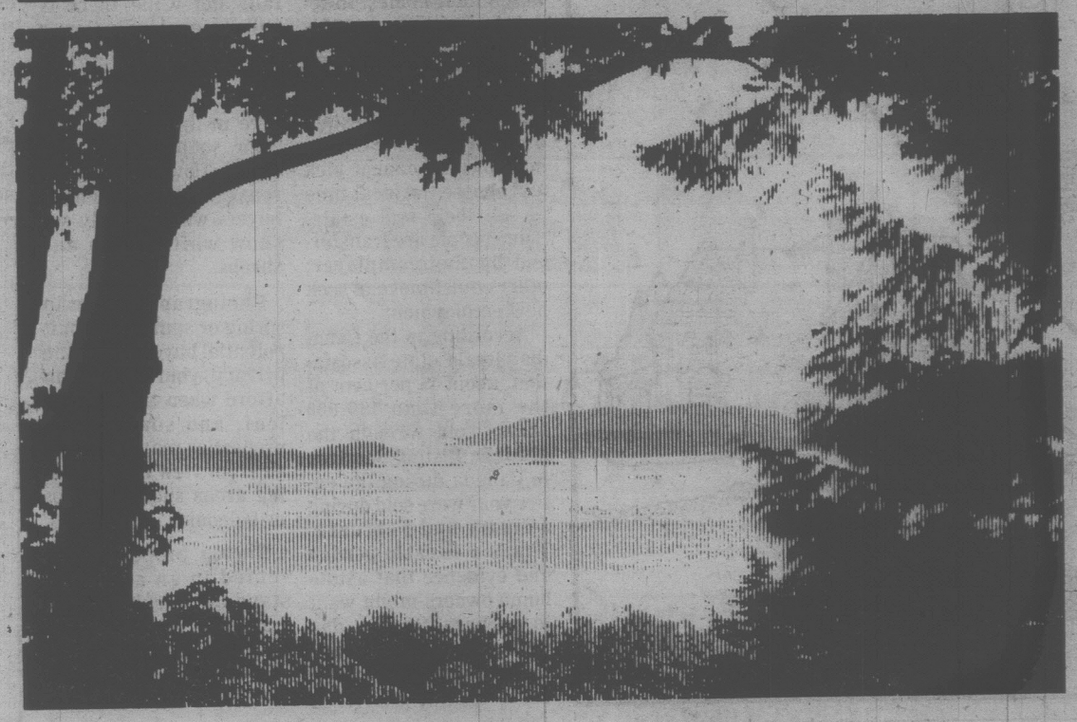
Un·real estate.



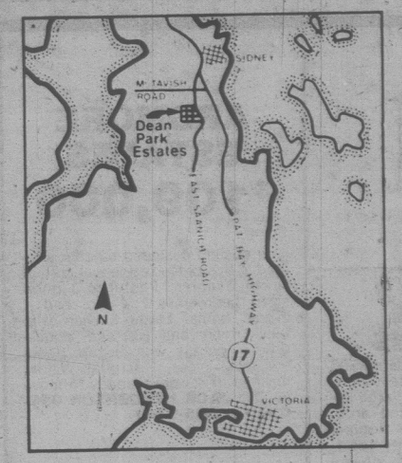
Escape the everyday real world at Dean Park Estates.

Here on the southeast slopes of Mount Newton you will find a secluded country estate — a quiet haven separated from the cares and distractions of the commonplace world.

The views are un-real.

Many homesites overlook the beautiful Dominion Agricultural Farm. Many have breathtaking views of the Gulf Islands. Many have unforgettable forest and park vistas. And no matter what sight you set your heart on, all come with a complete range of services, including underground hydro and telephone already installed.

You can also be assured your home and every home within this exclusive community will compliment one another. There is an approving panel to review designs in order to maintain a high architectural standard and overall compatibility.



DEAN PARK ESTATES

Another quality development from Park Pacific

Building a home? Set your sights high at Dean Park Estates. It's un-real. Come and see for yourself.

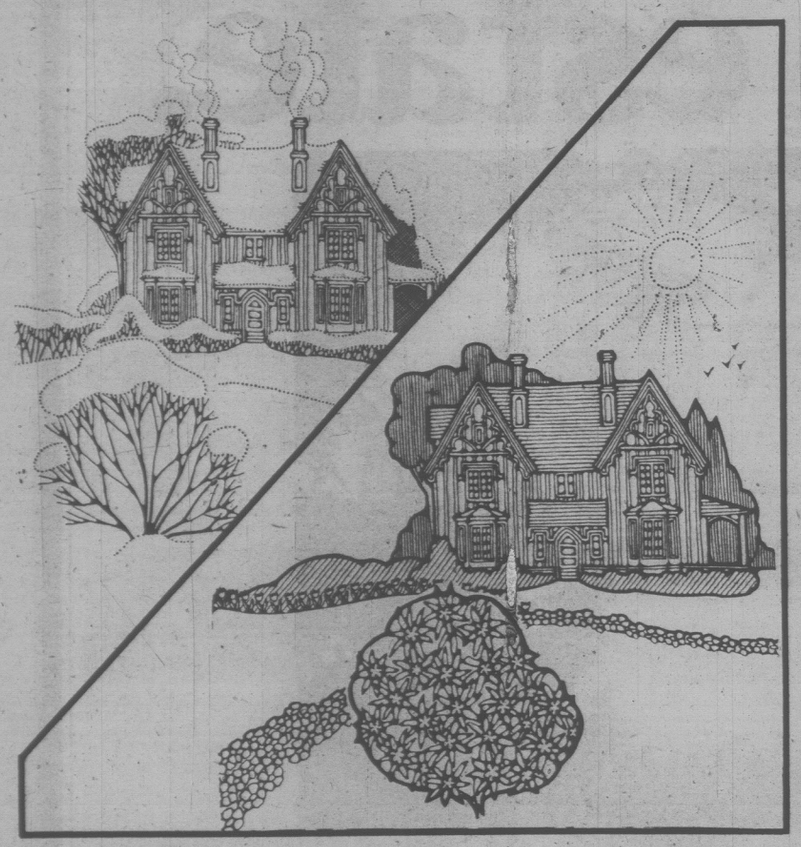
Take a picture of your home now if you're planning to sell it before spring comes



Traditionally most Canadian families have waited until the snow has melted before attempting to sell their homes. In recent years, however, this has changed states A. E. LePage Coast to Coast Real Estate Service, Canada's largest real estate organization. Often homeowners cannot pick and choose the ideal time to sell their real estate. Some people are transferred by their employer; others must move to seek new employment.

According to the Canadian Real Estate Association, about 15 per cent of the more than 140,000 homes sold through the Multiple Listing Services in Canada during the entire year were sold during January and February. That's a sizeable portion and evidence that astute home owners might want to prepare for the day when they too might be selling in blustery weather.

If you thank that this is a possibility, photograph you home and garden now, before the leaves fall, and while there is still some colour in flower beds.If the ground happens to be snow-covered, as it well may be, even here in the banana belt, color snapshots of your outside flower garden are reassuring to potential buyers who can only see snow white lawns and shrubs.

Photographs taken in spring or summer permit potential buyers to see the privacy your home can afford when trees are in leaf, and surrounding properties may be shielded from view of sunbathing areas such as patios or balconies.

Photos properly presented in an album or stand-up acrylic photo frames attract the attention of purchasers and assist visiting sales agents in illustrating the value of your property and its contributions to family.

Show color photos of your pool, if you have one, or your children at play with a lawn sprinkler. Having pool maintenance records available is also an excellent idea, and now is a good time to do this, so that you will have them by you should the need arise.

APARTMENT LIVING

Oriental furniture makes room tranquil

By SADIE GREER

Canadians have fallen in love — once again — with Oriental design.

Since the earliest days of our nation's history, Chinese-inspired furniture has been an important part of North American decor. No really fine home in the 17th and 18th century was complete without some small touch of the elegant simplicity of an imported Chinese piece.

The Oriental sense of scale, arrangement of forms and proportion impart a sense of tranquility. The purity of the designs seems to reflect our simpler style of life today and makes them blend well with any other style of furnishings.

Oriental-derivative furniture is the single style which is compatible with all periods of Western furniture.

The concept of ch'i or "spirit of life," is embodied, the Chinese believe, in the execution of all fine art or design.

Westerners may not fully understand the philosophy this expresses, but intuitively we are drawn toward it in beautiful objects.

Oriental furniture can be used to furnish a whole room, or a single strong design, such as the contemporary adaptation of an antique Korean "tonsu" chest, can stand alone on its own merits.

Andrew Del Fino, a noted interior designer, said "To me, a really beautiful room, whether furnished in contemporary furniture or in North America or European antiques, is one that is highlighted by a few pieces of Chinsee or Japanese art."

Not many of us can afford to buy original Oriental art to accent our homes, but a beautifully executed reproduction, or Oriental-inspired piece, can provide an exciting note for any room.

Now that there has been a full resumption of diplomatic relations with China, and the influence of Japanese artistic restraint is already a part of the North American scene, we will surely see a heightening of Canada's long-held interest in Oriental designs.

TOUCH OF THE ORIENTIs evident in this modern version of an antique Korean tonsu chest, which can serve as the focal point of a hall or foyer, or be very useful and decorative in a bedroom.

"WONDER WHO LIVES THERE?"

This is the house where Charman lives (in style)

By ANNE SWANNELL

Ever wondered who lives up that long driveway with the white fence that curves westward from the Pat Bay Highway just north of Elk Lake? You can't see the house from the road because it's screened by a stand of trees, but it looks like a Sussex farmhouse, with its brick exterior, W-shaped layout, rolling green meadows and manicured flower beds.

This is the home of Eric and Shirley Charman; five thousand square feet encompassing a huge drawing room, a den-cum-bar,and a collection of antiques and original paintings that is both eclectic and intriguing.

The house was designed by architect Leonard P. James, and was built in 1949 for Norman Yarrow, the internationally known ship-builder.It cost $180,000 to build then, and was, according to its present owner, a house in which architect James took particular joy, because at last he was given a chance to design something HE liked, rather than another of the Tudor facsimiles he was so often called upon to produce in Victoria.

"On sunny days," says Charman, "We can always find a sunny spot to sit in, as one patio or another is always oriented toward the sun, whatever time of the day it is." One might call this house one of the very first West Coast contemporary homes.

Only two homes in Victoria feature the sort of heating system that Yarrow himself, being an engineer, wanted for his. An oil hot water furnace heats copper pipe which is threaded six inches apart across the house, concealed in the ceiling of every room. All the floors are nine inch random oak planks, topped now with Persian carpets of every size and colour.

It's hard to believe this home is only minutes from downtown, when every window presents views of rolling countryside, of trees, barns, and no other houses. And if, when you're driving by, you should happen to hear a booming voice calling "Countess, Countess! Come and see your Daddy" or"E-4, I'm over here!", rest assured that it's only Eric communing with his cows. Each of them comes when called by name . . . galloping underneath the trees and by the spring-fed pond . . . to chat with him personally over the fence.

TO VICTORIA, via Casa Loma in Toronto, came this bedroom suite, which is said to have been Napoleon's. As well as the bed, there are occasional tables and a dressing table, all in solid oak, brushed with gold, which blends beautifully with the pale chartreuse shade used for carpeting, drapes, and spread. Chandelier used to hang in dining room, was felt to be more in keeping with this room than with the natural brick and heavy oak suite in the dining area.

A QUIET DRINK or a fireside chat are both equally enjoyable in this oak-panelled room, overseen by Myfanwy Pavelic's painting of the Charman's youngest son Wallace. The guest house can be seen across the lawn.

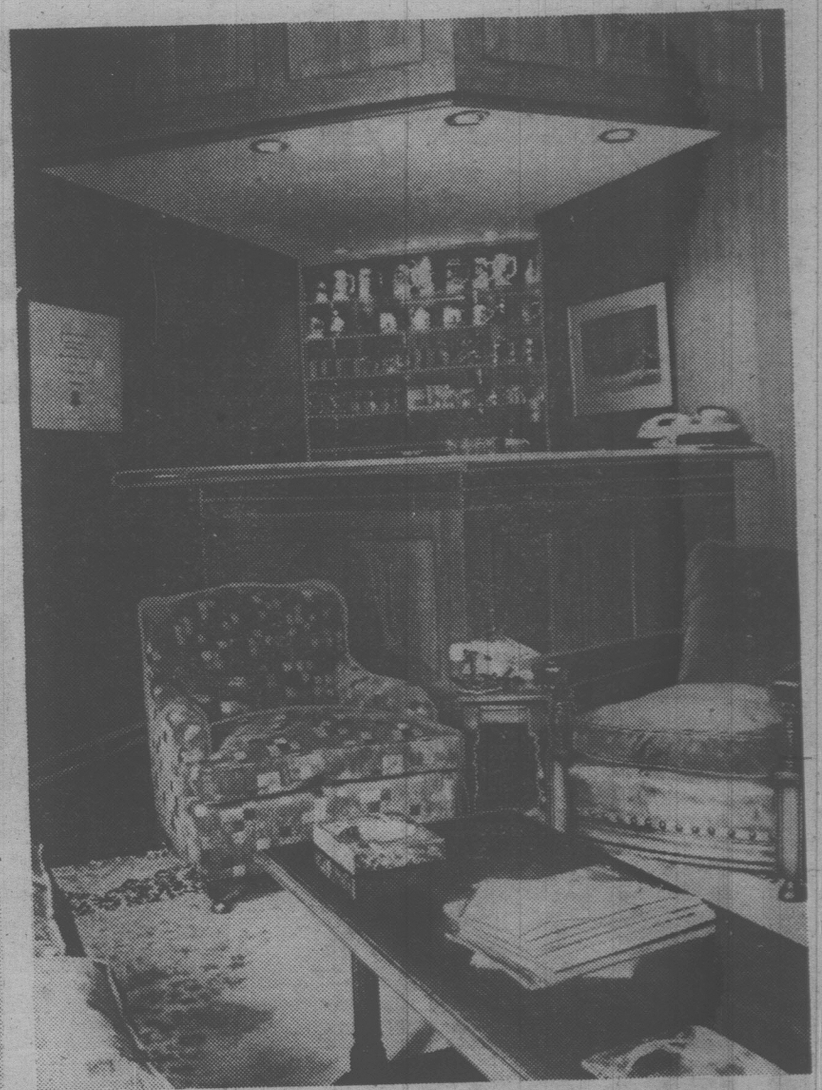
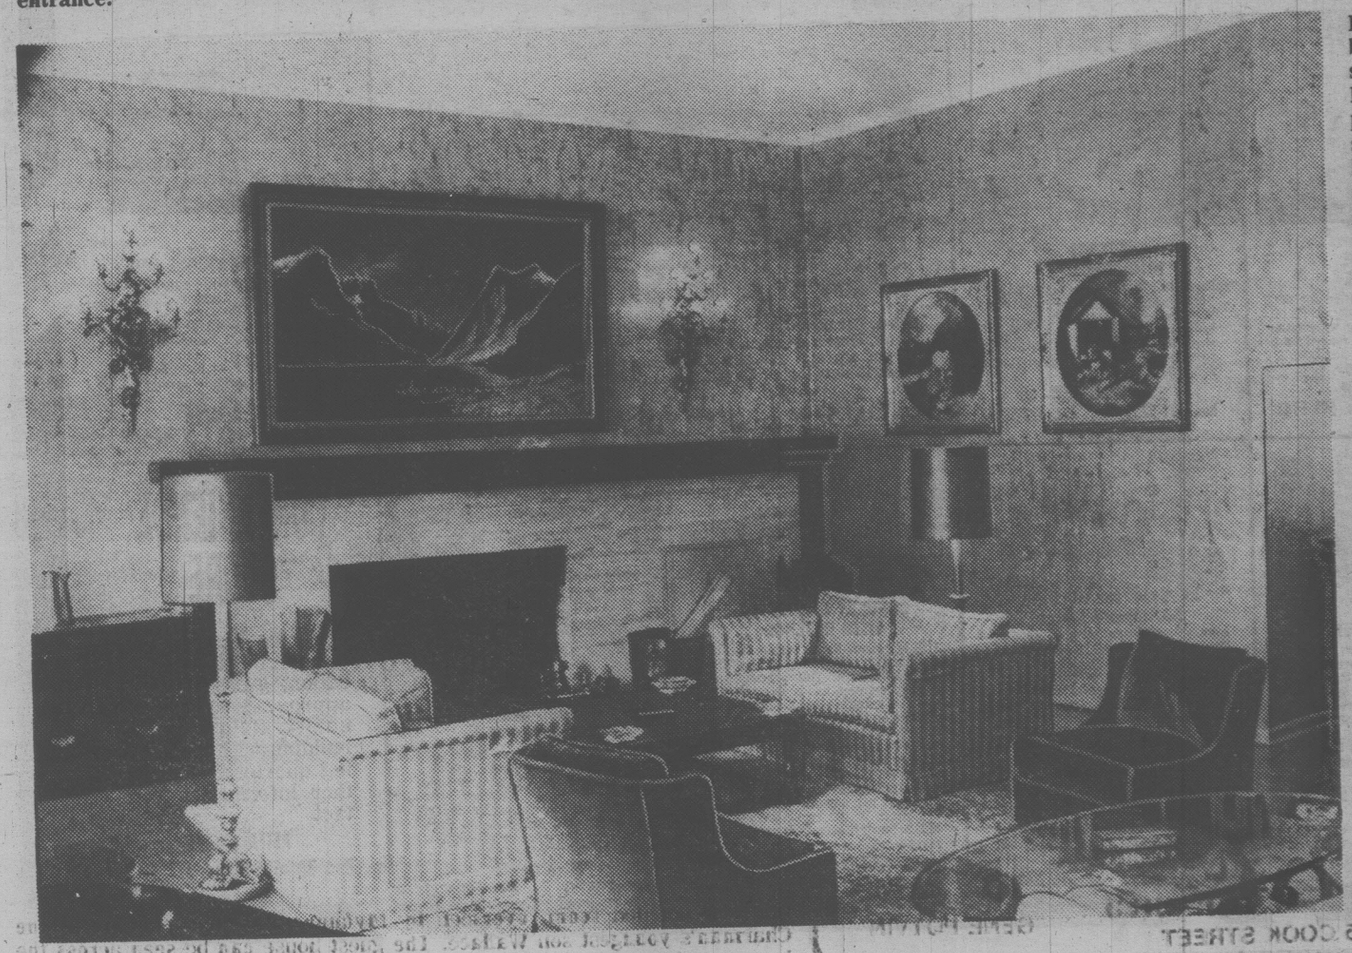
GENE POTVIN

A Napoleonic bed, real silk drapes and brushed aluminum wall-coverings... These are the rigors of life on the farm?

SURROUNDED by closely mowed lawns, the house may be approached from the Pat Bay Highway or from Brookleigh Road, but is not visible from either entrance.



RECESSED LIGHTING enhances collection of Toby mugs on glass shelves behind the bar and lights its serving area. Oak panelling was added during renovations.



BLUE VELVET chairs, blue satin striped loveseats, original Dutch, English, and Canadian painting, brass wall sconces, a fireplace in keeping with the large scale of the room, and a baby grand. That's the setting for cocktail parties and large formal gatherings at the Charmans'.

Wedgwood: A complaint

By JOHN HEARN

Reg Dixon-Marsden of Woodstock is an enthusiastic collector of Wedgwood Jasperware and he has some things to say which Wedgwood Head Office back in England might profitably listen to. Let's see if we can reach their ears.

I am a member," says Mr. Dixon-Marsden, "of Wedgwood Collectors Society of New York, The Buten Museum of Wedgwood, Merion P.A. and the Australian Wedgwood Society. From these sources and through my agents in England I manage to keep well abreast of all the latest items produced.

"Lately I have had some problems with Wedgwood (Canada) in Toronto, so I visited them to attempt to sort these out. After a long talk with their Customer Relations people I discovered that Canada is supplied with no more than a small percentage of the total range made in England. There is no liaison between Canada and the U.S. and no item produced for the American market can be obtained here.

"This, I feel, is a great pity but it seems to be company policy laid down by Head Office in England. The Toronto office is not supplied with information that collectors like myself might wish to check and I hope to do something about this when sending a report to England. I am sure that if they knew the potential size of the collector market in Canada they would do something about it. I discussed this recently with people handling Wedgwood at Eaton's, Simpsons and Birks in Toronto as well as McIntosh and Watts in Ottawa who are one of Wedgwood's largest retailers and they all agreed that the range could be extended.

"Since 1967 when special items were produced for the Centennial, Canada has only had special items for the R.C.M.P. Centennial in 1973. The Olympics in 1976, and a special of the Parliament Buildings commissioned by McIntosh and Watts in 1973 and Eaton's for the opening of the Toronto Centre in 1977. This seems a small number for such a large country as this.

"Wedgwood, like any other corporation is sensitive to public concern and I would very much like to hear from other serious Wedgwood collectors on the subject. I am also very interested in starting a Wedgwood Collector's Club here in Canada. There is not one at this time and talking to Wedgwood retailers they seem quite enthusiastic about it. I note that you will neither print addresses nor pass them on but I am only too willing for mine to appear. It is 375B, Devonshire Avenue, Apt. 18, Woodstock, Ontario, N4S 5P5."

Wedgwood buffs can contact Mr. Dixon-Marsden by mail or phone him at ll2-519-539-2217. Maybe he will get a call from England — unless Wedgwood think we still communicate by smoke signal.

The fact is that they have been exporting to Canada since the early part of the nineteenth century and it is entirely possible that some of the original shipping clerks are still with them and they have not yet received confirmation of any changes in our colonial status.

Patrick McGahern of Ottawa sends me book catalogues occasionally and the current edition may be of interest to some readers who wonder about the value of their old books.

Here are a few titles — Rev. B. F. Austin, Sermons dated 1879; John Buchan, Memory Hold the Door (1941); Fred McCord, Errors in Canadian History (1880); E. T. Seton, Trail of the Sandhill Stag (1902); Jan Welzl, Thirty Years in the Golden North (1932); Katherine Hale, This is Ontario (1937). All these books are offered at less than$10 each.

Then there is Joseph Bouchette, British Dominion in North America (1832) — $500. Espinosa's Voyage to Vancouver (1930) $225.00.

In other words the gulf between run of the mill books and those which are even modestly valuable is vast. Anyone who owns old rare books of early Canadian life should put them away for another 50 years and then retire on the proceeds.

Reader's letters should be addressed to Collector's Item. C/O Victoria Press, R.R. #1, Lowbanks, Ontario. N0A 1K0.

Modular furniture really catching on

Modular furniture is increasing in popularity, especially for furnishing dens, bedrooms and study areas. Modular furniture consists of individual pieces that can be assembled in different ways for different looks.

The versatile shelves, bookcases, drawers and desks can be purchased separately or as units and assembled to fit the needs of an individual room.

Teenagers, especially, can update their rooms with the addition of coordinated modular pieces. Shelves, bookcases and drawers can be combined against a wall for a neat storage area for books, cords, stereo components and the other miscellaneous paraphernalia that youngsters seem to collect.

Many modular wall units include a desk that can be used for study along with the bookshelves and drawers to hold other items. Both wall units and freestanding shelf units are now coordinated to match bedroom sets or family and living room furniture for a total look.

OAK BAY . . .

This updated older home is set in a lovely private garden. Large living room with two fireplaces, separate dining room with fireplace, modern kitchen, four bedrooms, three bathrooms, full basement. Located close to the ocean, schools, shops and public transportation. Offered at $119,500. MLS.

ROCKLAND . . .

This character older home is set in a lovely garden and is located close to town, shops, schools and public transportation. Large living room with sunroom off, panelled dining room, large kitchen with den off, four bedrooms (sunroom of master and second). Full basement with several rooms. Offered at $159,900.

INTEREST RATES ARE HIGH AND MONEY IS TIGHT
IS THIS A GOOD TIME TO SELL PROPERTY?

Quite the QUESTION eh? It depends a great deal on existing financing, buyers' needs, is it all cash, are there any penalties, can it be assumed, should the vendor carry, etc. etc.
If you would like to discuss any of these questions, I would be happy to set aside 30 minutes or so to answer them for you.

INTERIOR DESIGN

Spread the light to alter mood and emphasize areas

By PAULINE GRAVES

Lighting plays as important a part in the interior design and architecture of a house as any of the component parts. Areas can be emphasized, moods can be created and poor features softened, all with lights, with their placement and degree of intensity. Ceiling spotlights, directed towards a wall of pictures, call attention to them, thereby making them the focal point of the room. But all other lights in the room should be subdued, and not compete. However, where good illumination is the object, for clarity of vision such as for card playing, mood lighting can be forgotten.

Shown here is a dining room by interior designer Bill Hulse, in which lighting plays an important part, but it is not particularly subtle. No ceiling spotlights here, but instead a large chandelier that consists of two hanging lamps. Because of the table's rectangular shape, the two lamps spread light effectively the table's length. But rheostat control brings the light down to a soft glow or up to brilliance, whatever is wanted at the moment. The point is not to extoll this particular chandelier over all others, but to suggest that shapes other than the conventional pendant style can be considered.

Another plus for this room interior is that the light fixture is in scale with the room. Although the dining room is just off the living room and open to it, it seems separate because of the large space it occupies and because the furniture fits the space well. And so does the chandelier.

Picture caption: The dining space in this house is relatively narrow, but it does not seem so because of a screened porch immediately adjacent. Glass separates two areas, but they seem as one room.

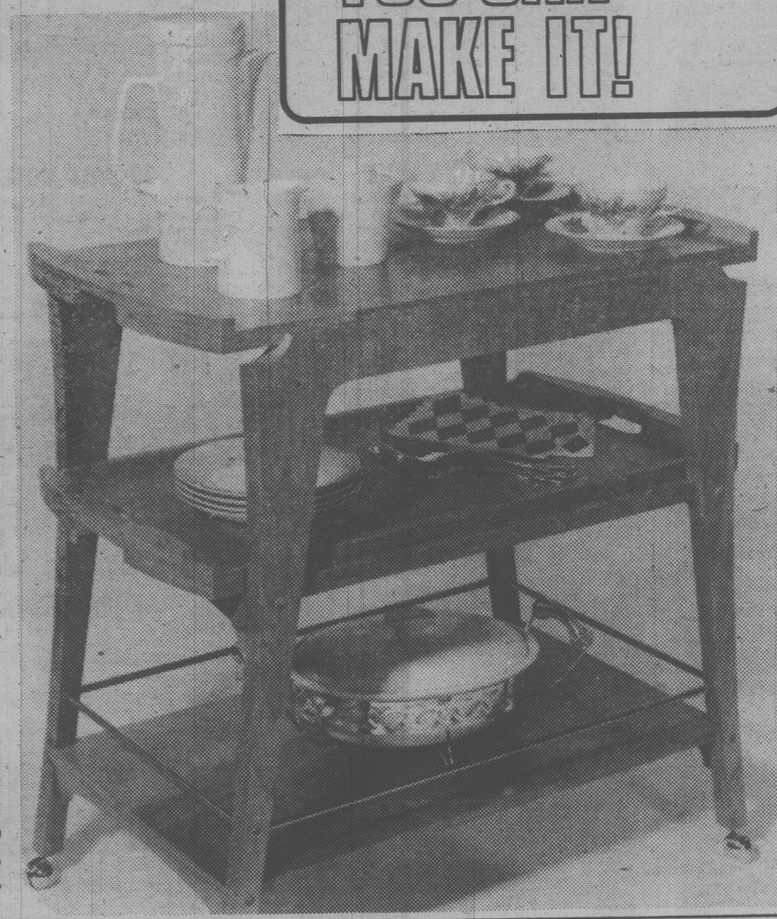
Send for plan, have it made by Christmas

By Steve Ellingson

Entertaining can be a joy — or a chore. And the fine line between a hostess' delight or despair usually is drawn not when the final guests depart, but before the first arrive. Proper equipment is the surest road to success. It is the oil upon which a party runs smoothly. Experienced hostesses always plan their entertaining to be as effortless and relaxed as possible. One of the most useful of all items for a formal party, or even impromptu entertaining, is a mobile serving table. It has numerous benefits. The one pictured here will save you countless steps. Use it for bringing dishes and food to the dining room as well as for removing them when dinner is over. You will also find it handy as a portable bar for serving cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and the like. It provides extra counter space frequently needed in the kitchen. And, when not being used for serving, here is a dandy place to keep your toaster and other small kitchen appliances. You will notice that the lines are simple and graceful so as to blend with practically all types of furnishings. It has been designed with a removable tray to further extend its usefulness. Building the table is easy when you use the full-size pattern. All you need do is trace the pattern on plywood, then saw out the parts and finally put them together.

To obtain the full-size serving table pattern No. 364, send $3.50 (includes postage and handling) by cheque or money order to: Pattern Department, c/o Victoria Press, Box 160, Cote St. Luc, Montreal, P.Q. H4V 2X3.

YOU CAN MAKE IT!



Energy saving hints

The energy crisis has made us all conscious of ways to conserve for more reasons than one. Here are suggestions by energy experts for cutting back on that water bill:

You use 25 gallons of water each time your dishwasher goes through a cycle . . . use it only for full loads.

In the case of your automatic washer, figure on 30 to 35 gallons a cycle.

Check all your faucets and pipes for leaks.

Check your toilet for leaks — you may be wasting more than 100 gallons of water a day!

Take a bath instead of a shower. If you must shower, limit yourself to the time it takes to soap up, wash down and rinse off.

Water your lawn only when it needs watering. When you do water, deep-soak it, don't lightly sprinkle.

Don't water on windy days.

HOMESCENE

MRS. ANNIE MELLAS was caught by our photographer as she was culling dahlias in her garden on Blackwood St. She has lived here for a year with her son Gus. Mrs. Mellas came to Canada from Greece 50 years ago, and has lived in Victoria for the past 20 years.

Winter can be rough on roof

The last two winters proved to many dismayed homeowners that ice and cold can damage roofs. The problem? Water leakage. It can — and did — happen in the best of houses.

Even in below-freezing weather, snow on the roof will thaw primarily because of heat loss through the roof from the house, and also because of the sun's heat. As this melted snow reaches the overhang, it refreezes. Here there is no heat loss, so the roof surface is much colder. And, once ice has formed on the overhand, subsequent thawings become trapped, creating an ice dam. The dam, in turn, traps excess water, which soon backs up under the shingles and begins to leak into the home.

One manufacturer has come up with an effective solution to this problem. This company is marketing a roof and gutter heating cable kit, which, when installed around the overhang, prevents ice from forming. According to the company, the cables can be installed with little effort and the setup is inexpensive to operate. Operating time is minimal, since it isn't necessary to melt all of the ice on the overhang. The cables keep a path open that allows melted snow to run off. Additional cable installed in gutters and downspouts assures proper drainage.

The complete kit includes installation instructions, special shingle clips with spurs to hold the cable to the roof and cable links to separate the roof cables from the gutter cable. All cables are completely insulated and designed to be relatively inconspicuous when installed.

NOW YOU KNOW

Fireplaces? Fence posts? Let George show you how

By GEORGE DALGLEISH

Q. We want to install a zero-clearance fireplace in our house and we want to install it outside the house on a platform attached to the house with just the face of the fireplace inside the house. But we have neighbors who did the same thing and last winter they had a very cold fireplace on cold days. Can you tell us what we can do so that we won't have the same problem.

A. Most times problems with a cold fireplace installed in this manner have to do with the insulating around the fireplace since it is installed outside the existing house insulation. Some people simply insulate the fireplace chase (the chase is what they call the enclosure around the fireplace chimney) with fibreglass, but unfortunately sometimes the fibreglass will slip out of place or may not be installed properly. I installed two zero-clearance fireplaces in the same manner and I used the fine Zonolite insulation and simply filled the entire cavity around the fireplace and chimney right up to the ceiling with Zonolite. It took quite a bit of Zonolite but the firebox is quite well insulated and there are no problems. The other problem associated with a cold fireplace is when not enough makeup air is provided in the home for such things as the air that goes up the chimney of your heating system at all times whether the furnace is on or not, and air that is removed from the home through fans and other means. This will cause a slight downdraft in the chimney and even when the damper is shut it can cause the fireplace to cool off to the point of transferring cold into the house. The solution to this, if you have a forced air system, is to install a fresh air vent into the existing return air plenum. It should be at least 5" in diameter and it is installed through the concrete foundation of your home and into the return air plenum as close to the furnace as possible.

Q. We installed a fence a few years ago and found that the posts had rotted off right at ground level. To make sure that the posts were held solidly in place we poured concrete around the posts, but they broke off right at the very top of the concrete. We have to install new posts now and want to know what we should do to make sure that this doesn't happen again.

A. One of the factors contributing to the problem is the fact that you did pour in concrete arond the posts. Posts should not be set in solid concrete, but rather a dry mixture of portland cement and gravel tramped around the posts. Then the moisture in the soil causes this mixture to solitify in a honeycomb fashion providing extra support to the posts, and also allowing drainage. Poured concrete will retain moisture and cause the post to rot off as has happened in your case.

For corner posts or for all your posts for that matter, there is a new product on the market that holds the posts in place very solidly and is a foam. It is called Postset. It is quite a bit more expensive than the dry portland cement and sand mixture but it also provides a lot of support.

Q. We want to install a patio deck in the back of our house but we found that the price of cedar made it too expensive for us. A friend of ours told us to buy ordinary spruce lumber and just paint the preserving material on it. Is it okay and will it last?

A. I wouldn't recommend painting a wood preservative on spruce lumber for a deck. If you don't like the cost of cedar these days why not try a preserved wood. This preserved wood such as Outdoor Wood is pressure treated with a preservative that will make it last just about as long as cedar and at a lot less money. The chemicals used are the same as used for preserving wood for wood foundations, but the treatment is different. The wood that is usually treated is fir, larch, jackpine, and hemlock.

When building an outdoor deck such as this, use hot dipped galvanized nails as common nails will rust and nails that are simply coated will sometimes rust right off. If you can't get hot dipped galvanized nails, the next best would be electro-galvanized nails.

Q. We have an older home and found out that we don't have a vapor barrier in the wall. We want to add insulation in the wall and we are planning on using ureaformaldehyde foam. We also realize that it is important to have a vapor barrier and we are wondering what you might suggest.

A. There is a new vapour barrier paint available by the Glidden Company and it is called Insul-aid. According to the reports I have, it provides an effective vapour barrier when painted on the interior surfaces of the wall. It can be used as a base coat for paint and then a regular wall paint can be applied over it.

Besides painting on this vapor barrier paint, it is important that you try to prevent air leakage into the wall at junction boxes for electrical plugs by wrapping them in plastic and by caulking well around windows and doors. This is done by removing the casing inside and then using caulking material or a urethane foam material.

Give your furniture a smart face-lift

By JOSEPH DANIELS

First-time condominium owners sometimes have the urge to rush out and buy new furniture to complement their new surroundings. This can be expensive, particularly after meeting the new mortgage costs, maintenance fees and regular monthly expenses.

But there is an alternative — give your old furniture a face-lift. You can save money and add a unique touch to your home by refinishing an old attic-horror or thrifty flea market purchase. An old dresser can look like new by giving it a new finish and replacing the doorknobs.

The Miniwax Co. offers the following tips on preparing the wood, correcting imperfections and selecting the finish.

1. Inspect wood for fungus or mildew which will appear as gray-blue streaks or blemishes and cannot be bleached out or covered.

2. Sand to delete scratches, nicks and tooling and to provide a tight, smooth surface. Any dust can be removed with a lint-free cloth or tack rag.

3. Raise shallow dents and gouges with steam by placing a damp cloth over the dent, then pressing down hard with a medium-hot iron. The steam causes the wood fibers to expand.

4. For gouges and cracks, mix animal glue with the sanding dust, tamp in the mixture, let cure and smooth down with a razor blade.

5. Choose the wood finish to fit in with the color scheme of your home. When applying the finish, use a clean brush or cloth to penetrate deep into the wood. Deep penetration prevents dents and scratches from exposing bare wood.

6. After finishing, apply a protective surface. Finishing waxes, antique oil and polyurethanes offer a variety of protective surfaces.

7. For long-lasting beauty and durability, polyurethane gloss and satin finishes are ideal for furniture subject to heavy use.

Vinyl siding maintenance-free

There is a way you can have a new-looking home, but avoid high enterest rates and inflated housing prices. A great way to improve the value of your home is to start with vinyl siding.

Vinyl siding is one of the quickest ways to make an old, wood-sided home look new. Why vinyl? Because unlike wood siding, which requires substanntial upkeep, vinyl is virtually maintenance-free. And, while aluminum siding initially costs about the same as vinyl, aluminum siding is subject to scratching, corrosion, warping and denting.

Color lasts

As a matter of fact, vinyl has proven to be an almost perfect siding material. Vinyl siding is solid color clear through, about 40 times thicker than the coating of color on metal siding. Solid vinyl siding doesn't show scratches or mars; the color never wears off. If you reside with vinyl, your house will have a clean, bright, just-painted look for years.

There are other reasons why vinyl retains its beauty. Vinyl is chemically inert, immune to the forces which can corrode, warp and ruin metal siding. Vinyl can resist the damaging effects of acids, salt-water air, sunshine, rain and airborne industrial pollutants.

Easy to maintain

Of course, you wnat anything you put on your home to be as safe as possible. Metal siding will conduct electricity and must be grounded by an electrician in some areas of the country. It also magnifies the rat-a-tat sounds of rain and hail. But, vinyl siding does not transmit sound nor conduct electricity.

Vinyl siding is also a nonconductor of heat and cold, which increased its insulation value. It does not attract condensation or moisture, and provides much better resistance to temperature changes than metal.

When you select a brand of vinyl diding, make certain it meets appropriate building codes. You should buy a brand that has the approval of all major codes.

Warranty important

A warranty is all-important. What will you get in writing to guarantee the quality of the siding material? Is the warranty transferable, if you decide to sell your house?

THE UNUSUALLY neat, clean, and craftsmanlike appearance of this vinyl siding is the result of accurately formed panels which interlock and cover nail-heads completely: good looking, functional too.

Improve your home for re-sale value by combining spaces

Many a home, for instance, can benefit greatly from the addition of an entry way where there is none. Having a vestibule to welcome guests and to act as a buffer for outside elements makes any home seem more gracious and adds greatly to family privacy.

One of the most pressing home needs is for extra room to accommodate a growing family.

One popular solution is to turn that attic into a youngster's bedroom . . . garages are also becoming successful room add-ons for many crowded families, as basements have been for some time.

Where spaciousness is desired, two small rooms can become one large area, providing a more expansive look: a cramped kitchen for instance, might incorporate an adjoining service porch . . . a small living room and even smaller dining room might benefit from the removal of a wall to create one large living-dining area . . . or, two tiny bedrooms can become a spacious master suite.

Eliminating walls in this way may solve space problems in some homes, for considerably less than the cost of adding on.

Often, space is not so much a problem as the home that is showing its age. Here's where modernizing can work wonders. The antiquated bathroom or kitchen can get a new lease on life with the addition of new fixtures or built-ins.

With the trend to luxuriousness in bathrooms, the modernizing possibilities are countless. In today's kitchens the stress is on family togetherness and casual entertaining, making the addition of island areas especially desirable.

No feature dates a home so much as woodwork. If the woodwork in your home is not compatible with your taste or furniture, you can either disguise it or remove it — conversely, an uninteresting home can benefit greatly from the addition of woodwork to create a period look.

Sometimes a home can get a whole new look with just carpeting: small rooms can be unified and made to look larger.

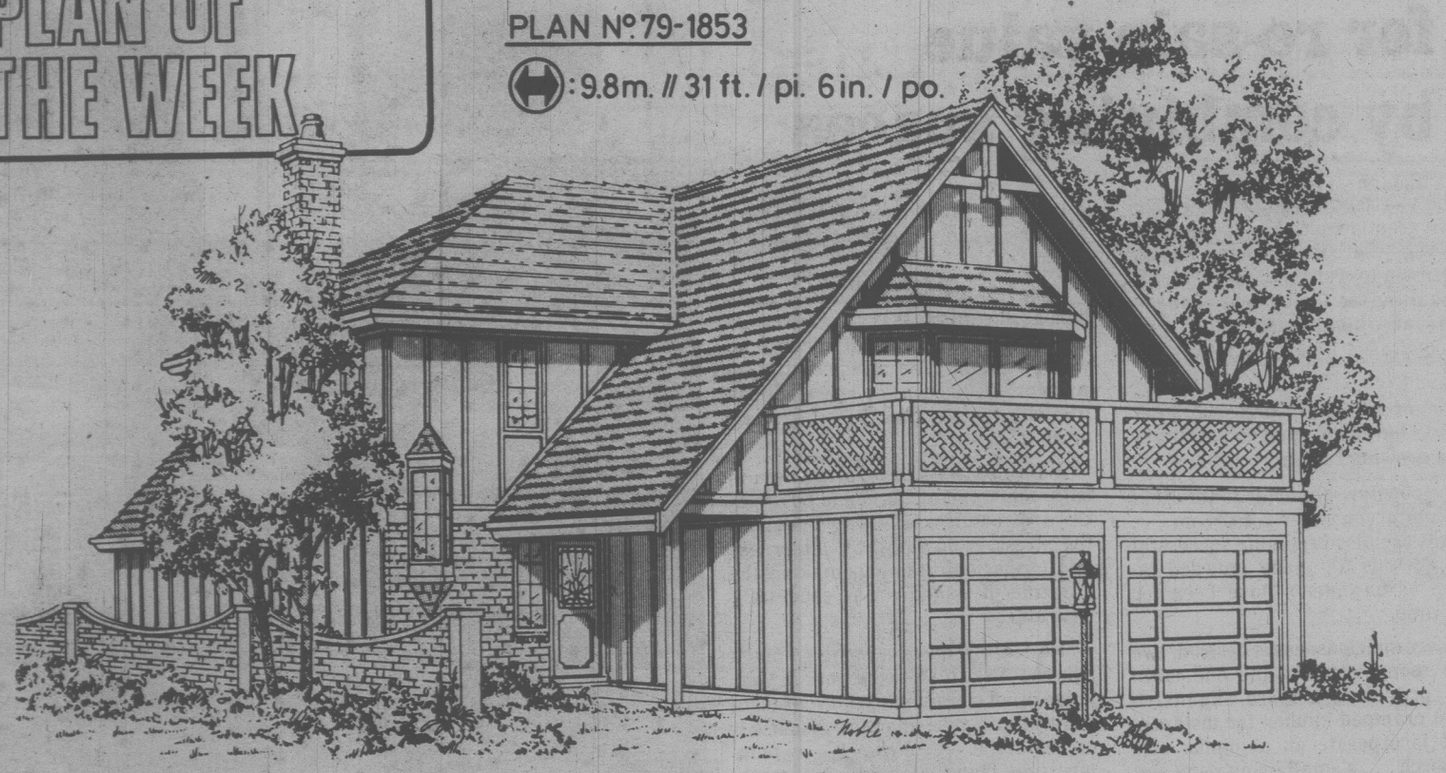
PLAN OF THE WEEK

PLAN Nº 79-1853

: 9.8m. // 31 ft. / pi. 6 in. / po.



Stately Victorian Style Manor

Here's an impressive one-and-one-half storey home design which combines high visual appeal with a practical and convenient interior layout to achieve convenience and a sense of luxury at every turn. The design is perfectly suited to the narrow frontage building lot and would make an ideal home for the medium size-family. The "period" tone of the exterior, which is finished in unique vertical siding, with brick veneer and chimney, and with shake or traditional asphalt shingle roofing, creating a facade which suggests high quality and social grace.

The weather-protected exterior leads into a spacious reception foyer and closet storage area which faces the indoor garden under the stairwell. Directly ahead is the large rectangular living room featuring a unique diagonally-positioned cantilevered-hearth masonry fireplace and wide sliding glass doors to a rear patio.

A well-planned U-shape kitchen separates the formal dining room and the more casual dinette, providing excellent separation of entertainment dining and relaxed family meals. The kitchen has an excellent work triangle, generous cupboard storage and abundant countertop work surfaces. Both the dinette and dining room have sliding glass door access to outdoor patios for barbecues and at-home picnic snacks. The kitchen-dinette may be totally isolated via pocket doors for privacy and hygiene.

A two-piece vanity bath and a laundry-utility area are adjacent to a large luggage storage area toward the front of the home. This storage area could be opened up to the double enclosed garage, thus creating an excellent mud room facility or tool storage area for the home handyman.

All three bedrooms are positioned around the central bath and linen storage for convenient access. Each has exellent closet storage and natural lighting. The large master bedroom has a three-piece ensuite bathroom with tub, a walk-in closet and a bay window with sliding glass doors to a front-facing balcony. The second bedroom also hasaccess to a rear-facing balcony via sliding glass doors.

Plans for design No. 79-1853 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $85.00 for the first set and $14.00 for each additional set, or by the package. Lifestyle furniture carefully machined

"If it doesn't go together easily give it back," advises Rick Scappatura about customer-assembled furniture, which comes knocked-down in a box, along with all the hinges and hardware needed to put it together. Mr. Scappatura, whose firm, Natbe Furniture, imports unassembled, modern furniture from Brazil and Europe, asserts that the only talent needed for today's carefully machined furniture kits is the ability to read, and patience.

Wood and wood-laminate, customer-assembled furniture, called "lifestyle" in many stores, has been upgraded in styling and quality, removed from the housewares departments and placed in the furniture area. Today, usually only the tag tells the difference between what comes shipped to you knocked down and what doesn't.

The wood look-alike, high quality laminates are used to give texture, warmth and beauty of wood to customer-assembled furniture, along with peace of mind from scratches, stains and abrasions. They also wipe clean with a damp rag in an instant.

Furniture manufacturers employing fine, wood-patterned laminates for price savings and great durability, also have lifted the quality and design of their lines.

One leader in family room-style wall units, desks and tables, is introducing new living room and bedroom furniture in a honey elm laminate with elegant rolled edges and an impressive, class appearance. One of the new pieces in this line is a bedroom cabinet which encloses a TV set and offers two shelves for display or storage.

For those who hesitate about customer-assembled furniture even though the savings are tempting, here are some encouraging tips. When you buy, look very carefully at how the floor sample is put together. Read the directions at home very carefully, and entirely. Proceed carefully, don't force anything. It should all fit together easily. Have ready a wrench, a screwdriver and a mallet. Most important, don't give up.

In fact, manufacturers say that customer-assembled furniture is stronger because certain parts, like hinges, are of better quality.

Stores carrying only modular furniture are beginning to be found throughout the country.

Soft water saves money

Soft water enables you to relax, enjoy the niceties of life, and save money. The reason? It contains none of the harsh minerals that make water hard — and undesirable. They are all removed by a home appliance — a water softener.

Hard, untreated water contains calcium and magnesium which combine with soap and detergents to form insoluble lime curds, preventing cleaning agents from properly doing their job.

With soft water, laundry comes out brighter, whiter, fluffier, with much less detergent needed. Clothes last significantly longer. Because it cleans better, soft water brings back the gleam and sparkle to crystal and silver.

Soft waer is also kinder to you, personally. With soft water, you'll find your hair more lustrous and you will use much less shampoo and conditioners. Skin is smoother, with no chapping or dryness. In the bath, you'll no longer have to battle scum and curd. Soap will produce luxurious suds.

Soft water saves housework, too. There's less hard scrubing and rinsing. Most of all, soft water saves money. There are no hardness minerals to slow down or cripple washing machines, clog hot water pipes and plumbing. And, soft water means energy savings. Did you know that ⅛-inch of scale in a water heater can boost heating (energy) bills as much as 16 cents out of each dollar and reduce heating (energy) efficiency by more than 20 percent? Take a tip from the business community. Restaurants, motels, beauty salons, laundries, hospitals, nursing homes, and car washes — all use money-and-energy-saving soft water.

Not all water-softening equipment is alike. There have been advances in technology.

Some of the new home water softeners operate with computer efficiency at the touch of a button. New space-age technology makes it possible to customize all functions of the water softener and accurately program it to meet a family's individual water-hardness and usage needs.

An energy-efficient softener can save the average family as much as 6,000 gallons of water a year. In addition, it can reduce salt usage by as much as 47 percent and cut the amount of electricity required for softener operation.

TINY CHIP monitors operation; part of the computer function of the new water softeners.

Instant fringe benefits

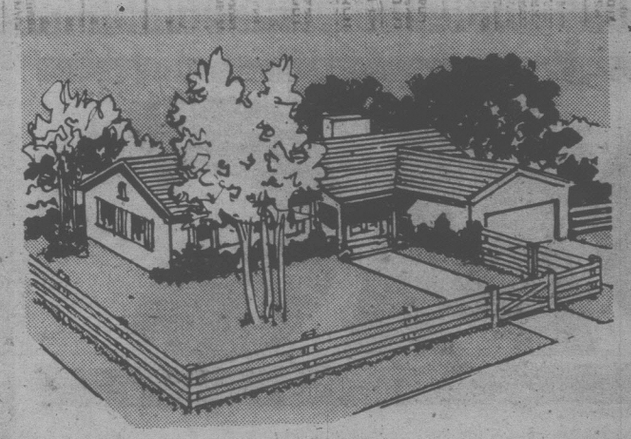
Make your own "instant" area rugs . . . with fringe. Fringe benefits — a splendid way to transform odd size carpets into attractive area rugs. Many times carpet shops or rug departments have good buys in sample carpets — often in just the right color too. Also, when moving from one place to another — just by adding fringe, the carpeting which doesn't quite fit wall-to-wall can become something new and exciting.

The more daring decorator can create rounds, ovals or even free-form shapes by first making a paper pattern and cutting the carpet with a utility knife.

Nothing can be more simple than attaching fringe to carpet. Many adhesives are available for gluing fabric to fabric. Place fringe on the floor, apply glue and use gentle pressure to adhere carpet to fringe. Keep in mind many household glues can withstand dry cleaning and shampooing.

Another idea might be to use heavy duty doublefaced tape — which can be removed easily.

Beyond the fringe — here are a few additional suggestions: rightly designed random-shear patterns are a good choice for "instant" area rugs — such styling can stand up to heavy traffic and still look untrampled. It's also wise to select a luxurious-looking yet easy-care fiber.



Open landscaping now the look to strive for

Gone are the days when landscaping was a pile-up of plants at the foundation and elsewhere about the property. Today, landscaping is more open, so one can see the individual characteristics and beauty of each plant and its flowers coordinated in the general planting scheme to provide a magnificent look to the whole property.

According to the experts, no landscaping is suitable unless it pleases the home owner and adds to the family's pleasure in living. Landscaping is not just to look at, but should be functional, contributing to family living.

Plants should be set out to provide year-round color — flowers in the spring and summer, deep green that provides a summer look even in winter.

It may not be costly to have a continuous flowering to brighten spring, summer and fall outdoor living.

Nurserymen can offer advice on plants with long season blooming, such as roses, or with typical seasonal blooming like crabapples and cherries and azaleas in spring, followed by rhododendrons or other plants to bring on the results wanted.

Every patio, for example, needs annual flowering plants in the summer months.

Help your real estate agent sell your home

Purchasing real estate is a great learning experience, which includes finding out how best to work with the real estate salesperson you approach for help.

By first answering several straightforward questions yourself, you'll be ready to tell your salesperson what he or she needs to know to be of assistance in finding the right house in the right location at a price you can afford.

By communicating clearly and extensively and describing your tastes and preferences, you will equip your salesperson with information that helps him or her select properties worth viewing.

"Potential buyers often hamper the salesperson by saying little or nothing, hoping he or she will recognize 'the right property' when it comes along," reports A. E. LePage Coast to Coast Real Estate Service.

Invite your agent into your present home to discuss your needs. In this way, the salesperson learns much about your family and your life style, whether you enjoy formal living and traditional furnishings or informal casual family life and contemporary design.

You also can outline the type of property you will want to see, describing location boundaries, property style preferences and living features your regard as mandatory.

If your present house must be sold before you can buy another, list your property for sale. By selling first and knowing how much cash you will have on hand and on what date, you know how much you can afford to spend and can make firm offers.

Otherwise, you must make offers conditional upon your ability to sell your existing home, and that weakens the appeal of your offer to the owners of the property you wish to buy. Sometimes a competing unconditional offer my be accepted over yours, even though your conditional offer may be for more money.

The general appearance of nearby homes, the number of shopping centres, churches, hospitals and playgrounds will affect your enthusiasm for one area over another. Parking facilities, noise levels from traffic, airports, railway yards or industry, and existence of nearby industrial plazas will all affect the way in which you feel about various communities.

Be prepared to tell the salesperson about your needs and preferences in terms of style and space. Let the salesperson know how many bedrooms you need, whether you need a family room and recreation room, and decide what you prefer in terms of housing style (bungalows, two-storey homes, and townhouses.) Explain whether you prefer rustic or modern homes, Tudor or Georgian, Spanish or contemporary styles, and why you are buying. In discussing your family's reasons for moving, you often pinpoint the kind of property you will end up buying. Remember that the salesperson sees many homes every week, and learns to associate properties with different buyer preferences. Your comments probably will remind the salesperson of two or three homes already on the market that are worth seeing.

It is logical as a buyer to work with one salesperson at a time. Make it clear that you are entrusting the matter to your salesperson for a set period of time and that you expect service and attention or you will change to another saleperson.

This is both fair and reasonable, and motivates your salesperson to work effectively. If after a reasonable amount of time you have not received satisfactory service, you can exercise your right as a customer to seek better service elsewhere.

Do's and dont's: How to buy at auction sales

By JANINE LINDEN

Across the country, more and more North Americans are discovering the joys and challenges of buying at auction.

Unlike their European cousins who have enjoyed a 200-year tradition of auction buying, it is only within the last decade that the North American public has awakened to the bargains to be had — and "discoveries" to be made — at auction sales.

Formerly the exclusive attraction of big cities, today, auction establishments have sprung up in even the most rural areas, offering a diversity of household goods to the astute buyer.

But how does one become an astute buyer?

There are, of course, rules to be followed. "A housewife was recently thrilled with her bargain purchase of an oak refectory table," commented William J. Doyle, President of William Doyle Galleries, Inc., New Youk's third-largest auction gallery, "only to return in embarrassment after discovering that the table actually was too large for her dining area."

Recalled Doyle, "There is also the story of the woman who successfully bid on a nine-foot sofa. Unhappily the piece was too large for the elevator of her apartment building and had to be hoisted from the street and brought through her window at considerable expense." Such commonplace mistakes can be easily avoided by following some simple, but often overlooked guidelines.

First and foremost, any prospective bidder must take advantage of the pre-sale exhibitions since everything is sold at auction "as is."

Scrutinize the merchandise. Bring your tape measure, flashlight or whatever you need to help you. Make sure that the table that captures your eye has four legs, not three. If your heart's desire needs work, keep in mind the additional costs for restoration, refinishing, re-upholstering, or what have you. Also remember, local sales tax when deciding what you're willing to spend.

And don't forget the "TLC" some pieces require.

A favorite anecdote of Doyle's concerns the young career woman who excitedly purchased a fine set of hand-painted Limoges china. "She returned to the gallery two days later," recalled Doyle, "hoping to have the sale canceled because she could't put the china in her dishwasher."

As you inspect the offerings, should questions occur to you, don't be afraid to ask. Every exhibition is staffed by gallery personnel happy to be of assistance. (But, if you want an expert opinion, bring one along.)

As an additional aid, most auction establishments furmish a written listing of items to be sold. In this regard, never judge a book by its cover. A glossy catalog with flowery jargon is not a guarantee of fine merchandise. Whatever their format, it is important that you know how to read such listings.

For example, if the word "style" is used — as in "Louis XV-style" — it means that the piece is a copy of the 18th century model. Although the copy may be a quality reproduction, it is, of course, not as valuable as the original would be. This, too, should be considered when deciding what you want to pay. To further assist you, some listings include pre-sale high and low price estimates. These are offered as guidelines and are not meant to be the last word on what the pieces will actually fetch.

The final price is always determined by the bidding audience, which differs with every sale. Don't get carried away. Decide on a limit and stick to it. If someone is willing to spend more than you, let them! That chair may be a bargain at $50, but costly at $100. It is better to wait for another day than to overspend.

On the day if the sale, there are also things to remember.

Most importantly, don't be nervous. The days of the horror stories and old wives' tales of the unfortunates who found themselves owners of an item because of an illtimed scratch of the nose or nod to a friend are over. Many establishments now require that all bidding be done by raising a numbered paddle which precludes any such misunderstandings.

Second, when the piece you want is brought to the block, don't tip your hand. Over-eagerness can sometimes be your worst enemy, inviting competition from a "phantom bidder." Allow the bidding to get under way before jumping in. If you find yourself bidding against a well-known dealer, don't back off. Dealers by at wholesale prices to resell at a profit. By topping a dealer bid, you will still have saved yourself a bundle.

Finally, never bid on impulse. Remember, a bargain is only a bargain if you can use it. "I remember the delight of one woman who purchased a charming, decorated corner cabinet from us," Doyle said. "Her enthusiasm quickly ebbed when she realize she had no suitable corner for it and would have to justify her impulsiveness."

Bargain hunting is a favorite sport of auction hounds.

Here, too, the neophyte has a few tricks to learn from an old hand. For example, do invest in quality. While styles come and go, quality is a constant commodity.

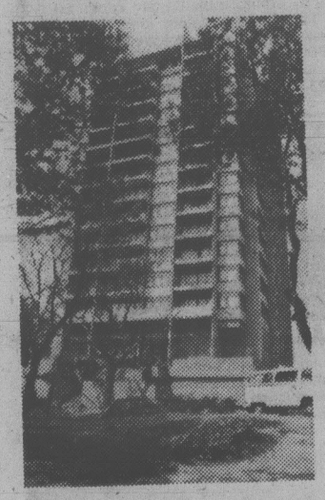
Block Bros. Offers a "Total Real Estate Service"

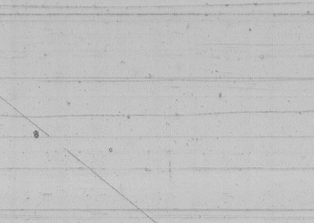
THE MORTGAGE DIVISION

Through the services provided by their affiliate, First National Mortgage Company Ltd., Block Bros. are able to provide interim and construction draw mortgage funds for our many clients. The repeat business enjoyed by First National attests to the satisfaction of those builders, contractors, and home owners with financing needs.

THE PROPERTY MANAGEMENT DIVISION

This division provides professional management to both company and client owned properties. At present there are 75 properties under management, of which 35 are client owned. These include highrise and lowrise apartment projects, industrial parks, shopping centres, office buildings, and strata properties. Block Bros. sets a high standard of service in the management of its properties through effective on-site service staff which is supported by the most efficient computer management system in the industry.





THE BROKERAGE DIVISION

The realtor exists to serve the needs of the people who have real estate to sell and those who wish to purchase homes or investments. At Block Bros. we make it our business to provide the best individual service to both buyer and seller. There are over 1700 Block Bros. sales representatives in over 65 offices located throughout British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba — highly trained specialists who are backed by the many resources of the Company. In order to give maximum exposure to every client's listing, Block Bros. National Real Estate Service operates an inter-office listing service throughout Western Canada. Weekly, the N.R.S. produces and distributes 3 unique pictorial catalogs, containing up-to-date information on homes, lots, acreages, farms, ranches — in all, over 7000 listings! No other real estate broker in Canada offers its clients such a market. Block Bros. salespeople and Block Bros. resources are the key to a total real estate service.

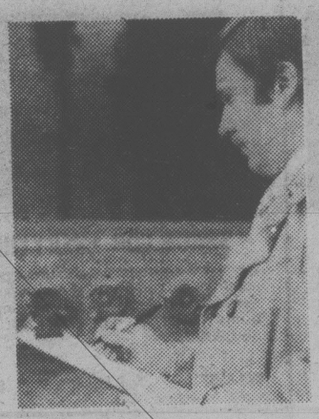
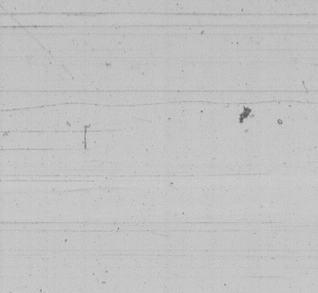
THE INSURANCE DIVISION

As a further service to our customers, Block Bros. provides insurance through their wholly owned subsidiary Block Bros. & Robertson Ltd. The Insurance Division operates as a general agent for all forms of real estate, personal, industrial, commercial, life, and estate planning insurance.



THE LAND ADVISORY AND DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

The Land Development Division of Block Bros. is active in the purchase and development of properties in the four western provinces and more recently, in Washington, Oregon and California. Professional personnel provide a management service for clients wishing to develop their own lands. Our Land Division also provides valuable information to clients on all factors affecting the salability of development potential of land.



THE INDUSTRIAL, COMMERCIAL & INVESTMENT DIVISION

The real estate arm of the company markets varying facets of industrial and commercial properties through this specialized division. Through its close ties with the business community, the IC&I division services its customers by assisting them in the various areas of property analysis in both leasing and investments. Offices are located in Vancouver, Edmonton and Calgary, with a new satellite office of the Vancouver branch being opened in Seattle.

THE TRAINING DIVISION

Why not join the Bestsellers? Block Bros. Training Division is dedicated to the professional development of potential salespeople in addition to providing training for current salespeople and management. Training at Block Bros. is an ongoing process, beginning with Pre-Licensing classes, "Succes(„start" training for new licensees, and advanced seminars for sales staff and branch managers. At Block Bros., our salespeople are our most important asset.

Ship 'God couldn't sink'

Bill Gilmore stood in the centre of a gigantic studio, the largest "floodable" stage in the world, and contemplated the chaos to come. The concrete floor of Stage "H", Shepperton Studios, near London, echoed with the thud of heels as technicians rushed back and forth; soon there would be no such thud because the floor would be underneath five feet of water.

Behind him, the boat deck of the "Titanic" rose majestically. Soon it would sink majestically.

"This is one of the greatest stories of the century . . . it's certainly the greatest disaster in the history of transportation. Two jumbo jets running together couldn't be this awesome."

William Gilmore, Jr. is co-executive producer of S.O.S. Titanic, which makes its world premiere on Channel 8 Saturday and on Channel 4 Sunday. The story he was talking about was, of course, the doomed maiden voyage of "the ship God Himself couldn't sink" — the ship that an iceberg did sink, sending more than 1,500 people to their deaths in the icy, pre-dawn waters of the North Atlantic.

Using the giant floodable stage at Shepperton gave the production greater flexibility in shooting intimate moments during the frenzy of the ship's sinking ("If we'd tried to shoot those scenes at sea, dealing with all the physical elements of the ocean, it would be an invitation to disaster . . . if you'll pardon the expression"), but the company also went to the water. Scenes of the recue were filmed off the Isle of Man, a special photographic unit flew over the ice-clogged waters near Greenland, and promenade decks, corridors and exteriors of the bridge were filmed aboard the Queen Mary in Long Beach, California.

DAVID JANSSEN and Beverly Ross star as John Jacob Astor and his young bride, one of the couples who sailed on the doomed Titanic.

TV Mailbag

LOOKING FOR LUKE — Whatever happened to Richard Crenna, the one who played Luke on "The Real McCoys"? Also, how old is he now? — C.W., Spencer, N.C.

Nothing has happened to him. If you haven't seen him on television or in the movies since "The Real McCoys" went off the air, I'd say you haven't been doing much viewing. The 53-year-old actor has done two series and more than a dozen motion pictures since then. Just keep watching, you'll see him.

GRANGER STRANGERS — Are Farley Granger and Stewart Granger related? Also, did Stewart Granger ever do a TV series? I seem to recall him in one some years ago.— Mrs. O. Baxter, Atlantic City, N.J.

The two Grangers are not related, and Stewart Granger is really James Stewart. But, no, he's not related to Jimmy Stewart either. It was because of his first claim on the name that Stewart Granger came into being. Back in 1970, he starred in a later variation of "The Virginian" called "The Men From Shilo."

FOR EFFECT — I saw "The Golden Voyage of Sinbad" on TV not too long ago, and I have a few questions about the special effects in the movie. Was there a man inside the statue that came to life to fight Sinbad? How exactly was that done? — Lou Bruskan, Framingham, Mass.

There wasn't a man inside the statue, but there was a man behind it, in the sense that it was special effects whiz Ray Harryhausen who created the effect. It was a product of his imagination and an animation technique he developed called "Dynamation." Another terrific showcase of this effect is in the movie "Jason and the Argonauts," which was made in 1963, 11 years earlier than "Sinbad."

AGES — I have been a fan of Burgess Meredith for a long time, especially in the two "Rocky" movies. Can you tell me the gentleman's age? — Mrs. Campbell, Provo, Utah.

He was born George Burgess in 1908, making him at last count 71.

BLONDIES — How many versions of the comic strip "Blondie" have been made and who starred in them? — Lucy Pohlmann, Hartford, Conn.

Chic Young's characters were first brought to life in 1938 by Columbia Pictures, with Arthur Lake as Dagwood and Penny Singleton in the title role. In all they did about 20 pictures, the last in 1950. Lake and Pamela Britton then appeared in a TV version in the early '50s. In 1968, Will Hutchins and Patricia Harty tried again, but in 1968 few people cared about such trivia.

Surprised

If you're an advertiser we hope not, at least not unpleasantly when you find yourself involved in the game of "numbers."

Numbers in the advertising business refer to your audience, whether it be listeners, viewers, readers, subscribers or just plain purchasers of a product containing advertising messages. Of these only the last two can be documented. All other numbers in the advertising game are the results of surveys, estimates, or the publishers stated press run.

In most daily newspapers (the Times and Colonist among them) our numbers are the papers we sell and those figures are audited by the Audit Bureau of Circulations. They don't accept the papers we use ourselves in the plant, papers supplied to advertisers as checking copies, papers distributed for promotional purposes or papers printed and unsold. They just count those our customers buy!

You won't be surprised when you select The Victoria Times and the Daily Colonist as your advertising medium. Our representatives can quote our net paid circulation at any time.
